Wife-Slayer Gets Nineteen Years.

Otto Wolff, who killed his wife on Sept. 30 last in the billiard room of the residence of Milton Knapp, a grain broker, at 113 Remsen Street, Brooklyn Heights, where she was employed, was yesterday sentenced to Sing Sing Prison for nineteen years at hard labor by Justice Hord in the Kings County Court. Wolff had been found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree.

WEDS BARON VON STERNBURG.

Miss Lillian May Langham Married to ex-Secretary of German Embassy at Washington.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Baron Herman Speck von Sternburg, formerly Secretary of the German Embassy at Washington, and recently appointed Consul General for Germany at Calcutta, was married quietly this afternoon at St. George's Church, Hanover Square, to Miss Lillian May Langham.

The mother and two sisters of the bride were present. United States Ambassador Choate supported the bridegroom.

Miss Langham and Baron von Sternburg met for the first time on a transatlantic steamer about a year ago. It was a case of love at first sight. In three months they were engaged.

Miss Langham is the daughter of Charles Langham, a wealthy mine owner of Idaho, and a niece of Arthur Langham of Louisville, Ky. She spent much of her girlhood with her uncle at Louisville. About two years ago, Miss Langham had a severe fall from her horse while hunting in the Kentucky bluegrass region. Her health became bad, and she determined to visit Europe in the hope of recuperating. On the way over she met Baron von Sternburg.

Baron von Sternburg is a members of a distinguished German family. When the Samoan conference was held a year ago he was one of the German Commissioners. He was conspicuous in the negotiations following the outbreak of trouble in China, and was recalled from Washington to Berlin for conference. His appointment to Calcutta was a recognition of his services. The newly wedded couple will sail for India on Dec. 25.

THE CZAR'S CONVALESCENCE.

He Is So Much Better that the Court Is Discussing Probable Date of Its Return to the Capital.

LIVADIA, Dec. 5.—The following bulletin regarding the condition of Emperor Nicholas was issued to-day:

"The Czar has passed the last twenty-four hours very well. His convalescence is following generally a favorable course. Last evening his temperature was 98.3 and his pulse 78. This morning the former was 97.4 and the latter 68."

His Majesty experiences no ill effects from sitting up in his arm chair at meal-times, and is so much better that the Court is discussing the probable time of its return to St. Petersburg, which, however, is still undecided.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 5.—In all the churches to-day special services of thanksgiving were held for the convalescence of the Czar and in connection with the birthday of the Czarevitch, Grand Duke Michael, who was born in 1878.

EARL OF DONOUGHMORE DEAD.

He Was at One Time Assistant Commissioner in Eastern Roumelia.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The Earl of Donoughmore died from paralysis in London this morning.

John Luke Hely-Hutchinson, fifth Earl of Donoughmore, was born on March 2, 1848, and succeeded his father in the peerage when he was eighteen years old and a student at Balliol College, Oxford. The earldom is a wealthy one, including the ownership of about 12,000 acres, and estates in County Tipperary and County Waterford.

In 1878 Lord Donoughmore was appointed Assistant Commissioner in Eastern Roumelia, holding the position for a few months. This was the only Government office he ever held. He was a Conservative, and a member of the Carlton Club. In 1874 he married Miss Stephens, daughter of the late Lieut. Gen. Stephens. Their son, Viscount Suirdale, succeeds to the title and estates.

GERMAN TOLERATION BILL.

Government Declares It Interferes with States' Rights.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—In the Reichstag to-day, the Imperial Chancellor, Count von Bülow, informed the Centrists that their bill in regard to the free exercise of religion was not acceptable to the Federal Governments, who, while respecting the convictions whereon it was based, saw in the proposal an intention to restrict the constitutional independence of the States in matters reserved for their individual legislation.

Count von Bülow, speaking subsequently from a personal standpoint, said he hoped the disparities existing in the laws of the different States would be removed. But, as Chancellor, his first duty was not to allow the Federal character of the empire and the autonomy of the members of the Federation to be prejudiced without the consent of the individual States.

M. SCHNAEBELE IS DEAD.

His Arrest in 1887 Nearly Led to War Between France and Germany.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—M. Schnaebele, whose imprisonment by the Germans at Metz in 1887 well nigh led to war between France and Germany, died at Nancy this afternoon from apoplexy.

The Schnaebele incident occurred in April, 1887. A German official decoyed M. Schnaebele, a French Police Commissary, to the frontier and had him arrested and imprisoned. This occurred at a time when popular feeling against Germany ran high in France.

The Russian-American Arbitration.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 5.—Herbert H. D. Peirce, Secretary of the United States Legation, has secured thirty days' extension of the period within which evidence may be submitted in the Russian-American seal arbitration case before Arbitrator Asser, at The Hague, to permit the arrival of evidence from San Francisco. Mr. Peirce expects to submit the American case before Jan. 8.

Mr. Gage's Report "Magnificent."

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—Secretary Gage's report has made an excellent impression in financial circles here. A financier to whom the figures were shown, exclaimed: "It is magnificent, and confirms the condition of the American money market, as indicated by the various loans to Europe during the year."

Russian Mobilization in Turkestan?

LONDON, Dec. 6.—"The State Railways Administration," says the Odessa correspondent of The Standard, "has ordered a thousand wagons of a Russian firm for the Transcaspian Line. As this line was already amply provided with rolling stock it is supposed that the order is connected with a new mobilization scheme for Turkestan."

The Castellanes May Live in London.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Vanity Fair says: "Count and Countess Boniface de Castellane are negotiating for a house in London, where in future they will spend at least a portion of the year, as Count Boni is deeply hurt at the want of sympathy shown him by his friends and compatriots in his recent financial troubles."

Seeking Sons of Mrs. M. A. Nathalie.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—The United States Consulate here is seeking the two sons of an American woman, Mrs. Mary Antoinette Nathalie, who was run over by a carriage on Nov. 30 and later died in the Beaujon Hospital. It is believed they formerly lived in Richmond, Va., and New York.

PATROLMAN SURPRISES BURGLAR.

Thomas Murray Charged with Attempted Arson and Burglary.

A man who described himself as Thomas Murray, nineteen years old, of 85 Wythe Avenue, Brooklyn, was locked up in the Westchester Police Station last night charged with attempted arson and burglary. Patrolman Dillon saw a flickering light in the residence of Edward Levy. Knowing that the family was at the theatre, Dillon entered a basement window and went to the first floor. Entering the parlor, he found Murray about starting a bonfire on the parlor floor. In a heap in a corner of the room was about $800 worth of silverware and clothing.

Dillon was immediately covered with a revolver by Murray. The policeman threw his nightstick at the burglar, knocking him down, and then easily overpowered him.

HOLLAND AND THE BOERS.

Premier Refuses to Give Date for Arbitration Proposal—Krueger Starts for Holland To-day.

THE HAGUE, Dec. 5.—In the debate on the Budget in the Second Chamber here to-day, the Premier, Dr. N. G. Pierson, declared that he could not at present foresee the psychological moment when the Netherlands would be able to propose arbitration between Great Britain and the Transvaal.

COLOGNE, Dec. 5.—Mr. Krüger walked to-day in the rain from his hotel to the cathedral. He was cheered enthusiastically by an assemblage of people who had long waited to see him. Mr. Krüger repeatedly raised his hat in acknowledgment of the cheering.

He departs at 10 A. M. to-morrow on a special train connecting with the Dutch express at Zevenaar.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—Dr. Leyds has informed a correspondent of the Lokal Anzeiger that there is no truth in the report that Mr. Krüger will again endeavor to see the Kaiser.

The National Zeitung says that members of the Reichstag assume that Count von Bülow will soon announce in the Reichstag the reasons for the Emperor's refusal to receive the Boer statesman.

The Deutsche Tages Zeitung sharply attacks the Government for not receiving Mr. Krüger, and says:

"The Government is afraid of some danger from England, thus awakening a suspicion that Germany no longer feels independent of England, but, like Portugal, abandons all independent policy."

A serenade by a military band was a feature of the pro-Krüger demonstration in Cologne to-day.

ANOTHER FIGHT WITH DE WET.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—The War Office has received the following from Lord Kitchener, dated Bloemfontein, Dec. 5:

Lord Kitchener also reports several minor affairs.

A SHORT QUEEN'S SPEECH.

It Will Be Read To-day and Will Consist of a Single Sentence.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The Queen's speech to-day will be the shortest on record. It will consist of a single sentence announcing that Parliament has been summoned to provide supplies for the army.

Foreign relations, which are not touched on in this laconic message, will be fully dealt with in the speech opening the February session.

SAYS DUTCH ARE ALIENATED.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—J. M. Robertson, who has just returned from South Africa, in a speech at a meeting of the League of Liberals, said the people here know little or nothing of what is going on in South Africa. He further asserted that he himself saw an order of Lord Roberts in July for the burning of forty farms.

The Dutch, Mr. Robertson added, are now absolutely alienated.

DURBAN WELCOMES ROBERTS.

DURBAN, Dec. 5.—To Lord Roberts, who has arrived here, was accorded a tumultuous reception.

Members of the Irish Association dragged Lord Roberts's carriage to the Town Hall. The streets were profusely decorated and crowded to suffocation. Numerous addresses were presented to the Field Marshal.

CHAMBERLAIN LIBEL SUIT.

Action Said to Have Been Begun Regarding Contract Allegations.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—It is reported that a member of the Chamberlain family has begun legal proceedings in connection with the published allegations that the concerns in which the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, his son, Austen Chamberlain, and others of the family are financially represented have had pecuniary interests in Government contracts.

BOERS SAID TO BE SURROUNDED.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—A London news agency publishes a dispatch from Pretoria saying that fighting has been going on for four days at Bronkhorst Spruit, east of Pretoria; that Commandants Viljoen and Erasmus, with 2,500 Boers, are now surrounded, and that eighty Boers have been killed.

At the War Office this dispatch is characterized as belated information regarding events covered in the official dispatches from Lord Kitchener, dated Bloemfontein, Nov. 30, although the statement that the Boers were surrounded is not supported officially.

Afrikander Editor Arrested.

WORCESTER, Cape Colony, Dec. 5.—J. E. De Jong, proprietor of The Worcester Advertiser, has been imprisoned on a charge of sedition, the specific offense being his publication of allegations of filthy atrocities by British soldiers.

Worcester is rapidly filling with people who will attend the Afrikander Congress. The British troops are not allowed within the town limits for fear of a collision.

LONDON ELECTRIC CONTRACTS.

American Companies Will Bid for the Work of Equipping the Metropolitan District Railway.

LONDON, Dec. 5.—Plans for the electrical equipment of the Metropolitan District Railway are now rapidly nearing completion. They are attracting much attention on the part of electrical companies all over the world, and particularly in the United States. Lemuel Bannister, who is a Director in both the British and American Westinghouse Companies, said this evening:

"There is no doubt that the contracts for the Metropolitan work will produce active bidding from all the leading manufacturers. The Westinghouse people, the Thomson-Houston Electric Company, and other American and British companies are already active competitors, but these companies are bidding in the names of British rather than American corporations. It is expected that work will be begun early in the new year, and, as the tunnels and tracks are already done, there ought to be an early completion of the system."

There is considerable interest in London as to who will succeed D. H. Louderback of Chicago as the special representative of Charles T. Yerkes here. Mr. Louderback is still actively engaged in Mr. Yerkes's interests, and is confident of closing up successful contracts before leaving England.

"I am naturally disinclined to talk about the plans," he said this evening, "as the matter must now be left to my successor, whose name will undoubtedly be announced in the United States in the course of a few days. It is a source of great regret to me that my wife's illness compels me to leave work which offers so many interesting features. London, no doubt, will prove a great field for electrical enterprise in the next few years, and the Americans are sure to figure prominently in it."

Bulgarian Cabinet Resigns.

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Dec. 5.—The Cabinet has resigned, owing to Ministerial differences.

ONE NEW SMALLPOX CASE

Dr. Blauvelt Blames Parents for Not Having Him Vaccinated—Only One Death.

One new case of smallpox was reported yesterday, making forty-five that have so far appeared in the Borough of Manhattan. No new cases were reported from Brooklyn or the Bronx up to last evening. The victim of yesterday is a four-year-old boy, James Doyle, of 317 West Sixty-seventh Street. The boy was taken to North Brother Island and the apartment where he lived disinfected.

Speaking of the Doyle case, Dr. Blauvelt spoke in tones of indignation of the actions of citizens, especially those in the infected district where the disease first broke out, in either refusing to attend to vaccination or refusing altogether to have it done. Dr. Blauvelt said that the Doyle boy was one of thirteen or fourteen children who had attended the kindergarten at 259-261 West Fifty-ninth Street. All these children are under surveillance, and have been since Nov. 29, Thanksgiving Day. Dr. Blauvelt on that day sent his men to the several addresses to either vaccinate those exposed or to see that it was done.

In the case of the house in which young Doyle lived, and in other houses as well, the parents said they and their children would be vaccinated by their own physician. They refused to let the Health Department perform the simple operation. A Health Department physician went again on Saturday to the apartment where the Doyles live, but was met by the same refusal and the statement that the family physicians would attend to the matter.

"If these people had had vaccination done last Thursday," said Dr. Blauvelt yesterday, "when I sent there, or had had their own doctor attend to it, the Doyle boy probably would not have been taken with the disease. This case is a fair sample of the difficulties with which we have to contend. People either in many instances refuse or evade, so that in the end disease breaks out which might have been avoided."

Dr. Blauvelt said that he believes the department has the disease well in hand, but added that undoubtedly many have been exposed, and no one should be astonished to hear of other cases. He holds that there is no fear of an epidemic, but that people cannot be too careful in taking precaution.

"Vaccination," said he, "is of course the greatest safeguard, and our warnings are being liberally heeded. At the same time, ignorance and obstinacy hinder a great deal. Health Department officials who have been sent out to different parts of the city have vaccinated over 1,000 persons, and we are receiving many requests from the owners, proprietors, and managers of factories and other business places where large numbers of persons are employed to have physicians sent there. These requests we are complying with. Over 300 people called here to-day for vaccination."

At the rooms at 68 Elm Street several hundred called yesterday to be inoculated. A steady stream has kept up for several days and bids fair to continue for many days to come, the idea having apparently gone forth that the greatest safety lies in vaccination. The fact stands out, however, that Dr. Dillingham's corps of assistants are not having an easy time in their visits to the infected districts in their efforts to combat ignorance, and even, in many instances, superstition. The failure of the law to compel vaccination has compelled the physicians to more or less subterfuge in persuading people to submit to inoculation. As a rule, however, they have been compelled to defer to the good-nature and good sense of those whom they approach.

An encouraging sign of the freedom of the city from this disease in the future lies in the large number of orders sent in by druggists and physicians for vaccine virus. The majority of the orders are for tubes holding enough for only one inoculation. The health authorities on the contrary prefer to put up the virus in bottles holding enough for ten vaccinations, and in consequence are working overtime and are behind in their orders.

The only death so far is that of Mary Holmes, the servant who was removed from 235 West Seventy-sixth Street to North Brother Island. The other patients are reported to be doing well. Notwithstanding the apparent let-up yesterday, Dr. Blauvelt said last evening that the department is prepared and fully equipped for a long fight. Enough virus has already been put up to vaccinate 20,000 or 30,000 persons, and the supply is unlimited.

A NAME DELAYS MARRIAGE.

Prospective Bridegroom, in a Dilemma Upon Finding His True Parentage, Goes to Court.

A man badly puzzled as to the name under which he could be legally married called upon Justice Aspinall in the Kings County Court late yesterday afternoon to request the Judge to get him out of his dilemma. The man has always been known as Peter Schroeder. He resides at 789 Madison Street.

According to the story he told Justice Aspinall, he was about to get married, and upon imparting this fact to his mother she astonished him by telling him that Schroeder was not his name, and he could not be legally married under it. She explained that he was the son of her first husband, and that his name was Peter Kleinhaus, which was his father's name also. Peter's father died while the son was an infant. Having married again, the mother allowed Peter to be called by the name of her second husband, Schroeder, and the boy grew to manhood in ignorance of his real name.

Justice Aspinall told the man that the necessary legal steps would be taken so that he could retain the name by which he is now known.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE BAZAAR.

The West Gives a Carload of Hogs—Doings at the Fair.

Woman suffrage stock was at par it was announced at the National Bazaar in the Madison Square Garden Concert Hall yesterday afternoon. The association will get 100 cents on the dollar for all its stock—a big carload of hogs donated in the far West and shipped to Chicago, where they have been sold at the stock yards. One handsome specimen in the hog line was raised from infancy to a comfortable condition of 340 pounds weight by Miss Laura Clay, a daughter of Cassius Clay of Lexington, Ky. Miss Clay has sold her hog for $15, and the bazaar will be enriched by that amount. All this would fill the hearts of the suffragists with joy if it was not for the donkey. A fine little Mexican donkey was promised to them some weeks before the bazaar opened. Not a word has been heard from the little animal since, and there is a fear that he has balked somewhere along the road on his way north.

"Miss McKinley," the finely clad little doll donated by Mrs. McKinley, is to be sold to the highest bidder. Twenty dollars was the largest bid received yesterday afternoon. There is a fine collection of dolls at the bazaar. They are of all classes and conditions. Some one has discovered a miniature Buffalo Bill in the collection, and Utah's Governor's doll was out with a new head yesterday. The under lip to her first one had disappeared. Some one said the lady had bitten it herself in her chagrin at coming to a suffrage bazaar, fearing that it would injure her matrimonial chances.

WOULD RETIRE J. W. GATES

Proxies Sought to Vote Against Him at Steel Trust Meeting.

Directors Said to be Dissatisfied with the Management of the Company—Purchase of Steamers Causes Trouble.

The financial district was much interested yesterday in the published advertisement of Welles, Herrick & Hicks, bankers and brokers, at 15 Wall Street, stating that the firm, at the request of the holders of a large amount of the preferred and common stocks of the American Steel and Wire Company was prepared to receive proxies carrying the right to vote at the annual meeting of the company, on Feb. 21, 1900. The advertisement explained that the object of the call was to acquire enough stock to secure "the election of an efficient Board of Directors."

In Wall Street the project is regarded as the beginning of a movement, the chief object of which is the ousting of John W. Gates from the Steel and Wire Board. Some months ago opposition to Mr. Gates and his methods appeared, and the house of J. & W. Seligman was understood to be active in the opposition. The upshot of the matter then was the withdrawal from the Board of Directors of Henry Seligman and Frederick Strauss, and the election in their stead of Directors commonly supposed to be of Mr. Gates's choosing. Later, previous to his European trip, Mr. Gates resigned as Chairman of the board, but remained a Director of the company. Since his return he has been an active factor in the affairs of the company—is popularly supposed, indeed, to have the controlling interest.

Of late there have been many stories of dissatisfaction among the Directors, and in connection with the stories it was said that a number of the Directors were opposed to the reported transfer to the Steel Company of a number of steamships, in which certain other of the Directors were interested, the transfer being made, it is current gossip, at a much higher figure than the original cost to the individual Directors.

However this be, the upshot of all the controversy is the movement now under way. Welles, Herrick & Hicks refuse to divulge for whom they are acting, though they say it is certainly not for Mr. Gates or his friends. E. Hicks Herrick, a member of the firm, says:

"The advertisement explains itself. We are acting for interests who desire to see an honest management and who are anxious to have more particulars about some certain transactions in which the company is interested."

In some parts of Wall Street the belief is that the Philadelphia Directors—Messrs. Widener, Elkins, and Dolan—are back of the movement.

FILMS AND NEGATIVES SEIZED.

While a big Broadway crowd watched the proceedings early last evening a patrol wagon carted away 10,000 films and negatives of the American Electroscope Company, doing business on the seventeenth floor of the St. James Building, as well as the proprietor, John J. Alexandra. It was the second time he had been arrested during the day. He was taken into custody last night by Detective Benning at the instance of Anthony Comstock.

Comstock, his special agent, Ditman, and Benning went to the establishment last night. They found Alexandra and a girl about seventeen in the place. Alexandra was arrested on a charge of selling indecent pictures, and the detective took charge of every film he could find.

The Federal authorities arrested Alexandra yesterday on a charge of sending indecent matter through the mails. He was taken before Commissioner Shields, where he waived examination, and he was held in $1,000 bail, which he immediately furnished.

ANTI-POLYGAMY MEETING.

Congress Urged to Submit Constitutional Amendment at Once.

A meeting under the auspices of the Interdenominational Council of Women for Christian and Patriotic Service was held yesterday afternoon at the United Charities Building, to further the agitation for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution forbidding polygamy. Darwin R. James, who acted as Chairman during the meeting, spoke of the agitation for the exclusion of Brigham H. Roberts from Congress, and read a letter from ex-Senator Edmunds to his wife, favoring the present agitation.

After the reading of this letter, a set of resolutions were read and adopted. They advised Congress to take prompt action in submitting to the several States an amendment prohibiting polygamy, and urged the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives to give such measures immediate attention. Gen. John Eaton of Washington, who was the first regular speaker, said that the Mormons have increased by not less than 43,000 a year recently. "One of their doctrines is that a man may become a god through a polygamous marriage. They control Utah, and in some of the neighboring States they hold the balance of power."

Dr. Sarah J. Elliot, a Deaconess of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Moab, Utah, who spoke next, referred to the visible degradation of the Mormon women. The Rev. Dr. David Burrell of the Marble Collegiate Church came next, and said that Utah could change its political coat with wonderful facility.

"There is a report spreading," he said, "that it would not be wise for Congress to give any justification to. It is to the effect that a bargain has been made between the National Republican leaders and the Mormon Church to secure the vote of Utah to the Mormon Republican Party."

SCHOLARSHIPS AT COLUMBIA.

Dean Van Amringe Thinks Present System an Improvement.

The annual report of Dean J. H. Van Amringe of Columbia College came from the press yesterday. Dean Van Amringe makes the following report in regard to the system of awarding scholarships at Columbia:

A year ago, the mode of giving pecuniary aid to students was changed by substituting a system of scholarships for free or reduced tuition. So far as a year's experience justifies an opinion, I think the substituted scheme works more favorably than that which it replaced. A remedy at once practical and wise is difficult to devise. That referred to and applied here is an attempt which promises to amend at least some of the infelicities of the former method.

The scholarships awarded for the year are as follows: Alumni competitive scholarship, Oscar Rempel Houston, from the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute; Harper scholarship, J. C. Sweeney of the Boy's High School of Brooklyn; three Brooklyn scholarships, Maxwell P. Lawton of Adelphi Academy, P. G. Gravenhorst of Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, and Edward Isenberger of the Boy's High School of Brooklyn.

PRIVATE PATIENTS' BUILDING.

New York Hospital's Addition Opened—Board of Governors' Reception.

A new private patients' building, an addition to New York Hospital, was thrown open last night. A reception was held by the Board of Governors, which was attended by several hundred people. The guests were received by the Board of Governors—Superintendent Ludlam, Assistant Superintendent Robertson, and Secretary Crane—and shown about the structure.

The new building is ten stories in height and is equipped with modern elevators. The first floor is used for executive purposes, the second for the doctors, while the upper floors are fitted up for the patients. There are a number of suites of two rooms and bath. The upper floor contains two operating rooms, each with its separate etherizing room, wash rooms, sterilizing rooms, nurses' room, &c., and each provided with its own ventilating plant.

At the rear of the building, separated from it and reached by special elevators from the yard, is an isolating department, with toilet, baths, pantries, and disinfecting apparatus. It has its own heating and ventilating system independent of the rest of the building. The building is situated at 10 West Sixteenth Street.

Two other buildings, one for employes and the other to be known as Governors' Building, are in course of erection. The Superintendent's house is nearly completed.

THE DEMOCRATS OF NEW YORK.

There are more than 200,000 Democrats in Manhattan and the Bronx—the old City of New York. Excluding the State of New York, there are only nine States in the Union that have so large a Democratic vote as these two boroughs. Yet these 200,000 Democrats are united by no political organization and are powerless to give expression to their views and their wishes in the councils and conventions of their party. There is a business organization known as Tammany Hall, a corrupt and selfish body, managed for the enrichment of a few bad men from the profits of crime, that arrogates to itself the function of representing these Democrats in City and State Conventions, that nominates all the Democratic candidates for office in the city and of late in the State. The 200,000 Democrats of Manhattan and the Bronx have no organization but Tammany Hall, no leader but the infamous CROKER.

There ought to have been a genuine Democratic organization in New York years ago, an organization apart from the vulgar, greedy, and rotten Tammany. There are certainly 100,000 Democrats, we have no doubt there are more than 100,000, who would rejoice to see Tammany displaced from its position of party leadership and management. The County Democracy of the old days came into existence in conditions less favorable than those which now invite and make necessary a new Democratic organization. Tammany has a hard year before it. It is already alarmed by the beginning of the movement to cut out the hideous social ulcer on the east side, and as the work of purification proceeds the name, the chief men, and the under chiefs of the organization are going to be involved in exposures of the scandalous responsibility of the Police Department for the law-breaking and immorality that have stirred the decent part of the community to indignation. If another Democratic organization is not formed the shame and scandal will attach to the name of Democracy. They call Tammany Democratic, they call the City Government Democratic. Who can deny that they have a right to the name if no other Democratic organization disputes it?

There is need of a Democracy in New York that has some reverence for the old-time principles of the party, a Democracy that cannot be lugged into a convention bound hand and foot and made to speak in the presence of true Democracy through the lips of RICHARD CROKER. The Democrats of New York are detested by the Democrats of every other State in the Union for the treacheries Tammany has practiced and the selfishness it has exhibited in National Conventions. Tammany is hated by the Democrats of the interior of the State. Decent Democrats cannot be heard nor can the wisdom and good judgment of the ablest leaders of the party be summoned to its aid so long as Tammany is the only spokesman for the 200,000 Democrats of New York. It brings shame and defeat upon the Democracy.

There will be a great battle for the Mayoralty next Fall. Tammany, fighting for its existence, will be weighed down by its sins and its responsibility for the vileness that shocks the moral sense of the people. A strong and sound Democratic organization should be called into existence before that campaign begins, in order that, in co-operation with other anti-Tammany forces, it may compass the overthrow of Crokerism. It should be borne in mind that the vote cast by a new Democratic organization at the next election will be the basis of representation in the State Convention of 1902, when, let us hope, the party will be able to nominate a candidate for Governor who will not be in any way beholden to RICHARD CROKER for that distinction.

In the entire city there are considerably more than 300,000 Democrats, of whom not more than 100,000 are in real affiliation with Tammany. Even if a great part of the Brooklyn Democrats are weak enough to prefer their degrading subserviency to Tammany, there is an opportunity, with leadership that would command respect and competent direction in the work of organization, to bring half the Democrats of the great city under a flag of which they would not be ashamed, to work for the attainment of ends not prohibited by the Penal Code.

Tammany is too loathsome for the leadership of this great body of Democrats, its vices and its defiance of decency have become intolerable. It can be overthrown only by Democrats. To neglect any longer the duty of organizing a Democratic opposition to Tammany would be inexcusable.

THE ARMY BILL.

It is not novel that the House of Representatives should be far in advance of the Senate in patriotism and wisdom. In fact, that has been for a long time the "regular order." It will not be disputed that it has been maintained at the present session. The Senate has been induced to take up, as the most urgent business before it, the Ship Subsidy bill. The House has taken up the business which is Nationally, and not merely as to private cliques and tax eaters and subsidy hunters, the most urgent and important, the Army bill.

The press dispatches do not make as clear as might be wished the differences between the bill proposed by the Secretary of War and the bill actually introduced by the Military Committee. We are told that the modifications are "radical," but they appear to go principally to the mitigation of the very sound principle of the interchange of service between staff and line. To this interchange Mr. ROOT attaches an importance which no officer who has not become, by much service in the staff, more a politician than an officer, will be inclined to say is excessive. In spite of the modifications, the Democrats twitted the Republicans with advocating a bill prepared by the Administration, rather than a bill which originated in Congress itself. We are inclined to believe that the reproach, so far as it went, was well founded. To be sure, it did not go very far. It amounted to no more than an accusation against the Republicans of complying with the advice of a deceased British statesman: "When you want to know something about anything, you ask a man who knows something about it." This the War Department has facilities for doing which the House has not to the same degree. If the department has, as is charged, availed itself of these facilities, and if the House Military Committee has in turn availed itself of the facilities of the War Department for obtaining expert opinions, so much the better for the War Department, the House, and, which is most to the purpose, the bill.

We admit that there are some things in the bill which do not seem to us justifiable. We are not aware of any such supereminent service that the present Adjutant General of the United States Army has performed that he should be made a Major General with the express proviso that his successors in office shall not succeed to that rank. A bargain between the General commanding the army and the Adjutant General thereof is by no means one which Congress is bound to ratify. A much more important defect was indicated by Mr. HEPBURN, in a question which evidently staggered the Chairman of the Military Committee. The question was whether officers who had attained to high rank and done conspicuously good service in the volunteer army should not have their services recognized by an opportunity to gain commissions above the bottom in the regular army. The scope of the question is wider than its terms. We have as yet seen no adequate provision either in the War Department bill or the House Committee's bill for those regular officers who were selected, and, as all accounts agree, most judiciously selected for promotion in the volunteer regiments. These officers were, by hypothesis, and a hypothesis that has been confirmed by the admirable discipline and efficiency to which they have brought their respective commands, the most deserving officers in the United States Army. Yet it seems that they are to be treated as the least deserving and at best restored to their former ranks without reference to the promotions that have since taken place in the regular army. This would seem to be a manifest injustice, which there ought to be wit enough in the law-making body to avoid without doing injustice to the officers who had not the misfortune to attract official notice by their superior efficiency.

These are points in the bill which call, we do not say for the defeat of it, but for the amendment of it. At any rate, they call for question. But it is not the questionable points of the bill that the wonderful persons upon whom has devolved the leadership of the Democratic Party in the House have selected for question. It is the points which are quite beyond question. The Democratic so-called leaders are crazily eager to justify anew the overwhelming vote of want of confidence in them which the country has just passed. They are Bourbons, unless they would prefer to be called "B'urbons," who have learned nothing and forgotten nothing. Their opposition is compounded of foolishness and factiousness. Because our National defense against a powerful enemy is not the regular army, but ultimately "the Nation in arms," therefore Mr. RICHARDSON thinks it popular and politic to propose that the work of garrisoning the Philippines shall be intrusted to volunteers! The surpassing silliness of this suggestion is eminently characteristic of the Democratic Party as at present organized. It is as if one should propose the disbandment of the police of New York, and the replacement of it, to suppress disorder, by a Sheriff's posse comitatus. Nothing is plainer, to anybody but a Democratic leader, than that the work before our army in the Philippines is work for professionals and not for amateurs. Our garrison there must continue to consist of regular troops, whose business is soldiering, until we have supplied their places, so far as they can be supplied, with natives of the islands. This substitution Mr. ROOT has urged and endeavored to provide for, and it is by assisting him, and not by talking nonsense about "volunteers," that the Democrats in Congress can most readily free their own imaginations from the bugbear of a huge standing army from which our liberties are in chronic danger.

This first debate of the session chiefly emphasizes our need, not even of a larger and more efficient army so much as of an intelligent and patriotic Opposition. The questions raised by the bill are eminently such as require the service of such an Opposition. If it were intelligent, critical, patriotic, the majority would go in some fear of it, however small its numbers. They would be afraid of an appeal to the country. But, so long as the Opposition in Congress talks such irrelevant drivel as that talked in the House yesterday against the Army bill, contributing absolutely nothing toward a solution of the problems involved, so long the majority will be absolved from the careful and circumspect preparation, or the logical defense, of its party measures. So long it may be confident that the Opposition will bring itself into public contempt, and may therefore safely be treated with contempt by the majority. That is always a great misfortune for a country governed under parliamentary institutions. But we do not recall any occasion upon which the misfortune has been so conspicuous as now. It is not only in the interest of the Democratic Party that its reorganization is demanded and the supplanting of its present leaders and spokesmen by men of more wisdom and of more patriotism. It is in the interest of the country at large.

THE CANAL REPORT.

That the Isthmian Canal Commission would present a report favoring the Nicaragua route has long been regarded as a certainty. The advantages of a Nicaragua canal through its nearness to our ports, the shorter voyage between our Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, and the very much better terms we can make for ownership and control far outweigh the considerations urged in behalf of the Panama project.

It was not foreseen that the commission would have the wisdom and the courage to recommend a canal deep enough and wide enough for the largest ships. The added cost will seem prodigious, even to minds that do not habitually look at great National undertakings in a small way. A second-rate canal, a half-way canal, that would accommodate the ships of bygone times and of which the growth of commerce would compel the enlargement or the abandonment almost before it was completed, would cost about $160,000,000. To construct a canal 25 feet deep and 150 feet wide will cost $200,000,000. That added forty millions will strengthen the hands of the open and secret foes of the canal. They will measurably enhance the difficulty of passing a bill authorizing the building of the canal as a Government work by the use of the public funds or a pledge of the public credit.

It required courage, therefore, on the part of the commission to take the enlightened view and recommend the wise course. Unquestionably if the canal is worth building at all, it is worth while to build it of such dimensions that it will pass through the large ships that are every year carrying a greater proportion of long-voyage ocean freight. It would be a miserably short-sighted business policy to cut off from our toll-paying list a large part of the commerce that would gladly avail itself of the use of a wider and deeper canal. We are assured by our English friends that the canal will be a losing venture anyway. It ought to be a losing venture if we adopt the short-sighted policy of driving away business.

An expenditure of $200,000,000 extended over ten years will not be a burdensome outlay, nor an unreasonable one for a work of this moment and value. It is to be hoped that the pressure for its completion and the advance in engineering competence through familiarity with the work will materially shorten the time estimated by the commission as necessary for the work of construction. We can ill afford to wait until 1910 for this "correction of nature."

But before we approach the problems of finance and engineering the political pathway to a construction of the canal must be cleared. First of all, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty must be ratified. We are not free to make a beginning until the clauses of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which bind us not to undertake the construction of the canal as an American work have been abrogated. That obstacle is removed in the convention negotiated by the Secretary of State and the British Ambassador, now before the Senate awaiting ratification. There is a better chance for the treaty than during the last session. Through various changes the Committee on Foreign Affairs has come into a better frame of mind about the treaty. Much depends on the firmness of the Administration in urging upon Senators of its own party the imperative necessity of ratifying the convention before any steps are taken for the actual construction of the canal.

GEN. MERCIER'S SPEECH.

The view in general taken in London of the speech delivered in the French Senate by ex-Minister of War MERCIER is most creditable. Englishmen are undoubtedly right in assuming that the harangue, more than any recent event, will open the eyes of intelligent Frenchmen to the dangers that lurk at the base of Nationalism, of which the Senator from the Loire Inférieure is the most conspicuous exponent in the upper chamber. It was to be expected that a speech of this kind would be launched by some one as soon as the enemies of the present Government had discovered how useless Mr. KRUEGER had been as an inspirer of any dangerous anti-British spirit, and it was perfectly natural, too, when we recall the antecedents of Gen. MERCIER, that he should make the speech. He acted with his usual disregard of consequences.

The general amnesty bill, in which is included the name of the man whose machinations sent DREYFUS to the Devil's Island, is not yet a law. Until it is, Gen. MERCIER is in danger of being impeached by a Senatorial High Court of Justice, according to a resolution introduced in the Senate in October, 1899. He stands charged with the secret communication of a secret dossier to the first Dreyfus court-martial, with the use of forged documents in the preparation of this dossier, with the destruction of the explanatory note accompanying these documents, with the use before the Rennes court-martial of the mistranslation of the Panizzardi telegram, with the persistent assertion, before the discovery of the first three of these crimes, that the first trial of Capt. DREYFUS was legal. All these things have been proved, and the question for the court to decide would simply be whether the position of Minister of War gave the criminal immunity from his crimes. Gen. MERCIER himself has said that it did, but he can scarcely be considered an authority on Constitutional law.

It is wasting time to consider MERCIER'S speech in any other light than that of a Nationalist manifestation conceived for the sole purpose of embarrassing the Government. The subject itself has been already pretty well thrashed out in the army and naval press, and no army or naval officer careful of his professional reputation would care, whatever his hatred toward England, to indorse a single word. A year ago M. LOCKROY, who has been Minister of Marine in several Cabinets, issued an elaborate statement in which he showed France's unpreparedness for any conflict with England, and said: "Thanks to the valor of the little Boer people we have several months, perhaps years, to prepare for war with Great Britain, and this precious time must not be wasted." He laid great stress upon the necessity for a new system of protection for French colonies and for the coast of France itself. In the discussions that followed, the best authorities in the country, while deploring the idea that circumstances should ever arise to make war inevitable, clearly proved that certain calamity awaited every port of France should she take the initiative.

France is practically no better off now than she was then, and whatever may be the project prepared by Gen. MERCIER while in command of an army corps, his attempt to make it public at this time arose either through a desire to advertise himself, or because he wished to annoy the Government by exposing an official document which he had no longer the right to divulge. Either view is borne out by the character of the man.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—People who watch theatrical performances from before the footlights have often been moved to seek an explanation for the "incidental music" which is an almost invariable accompaniment of the scenes most conveniently described as "moving." Lay theories about the purpose of this music differ widely, but lay opinion practically agrees that it is more or less of a nuisance, and that its abolition would make easier both the enjoyment and the criticism of the work of the actors. The Washington Post gave utterance to some such view the other day, and either because of the severity of The Post's language, or for a reason easy enough to imagine if one is a cynic, and therefore, since cynics are numerous, not necessary to mention, Mr. WILLIAM GILLETTE has written to the paper mentioned a letter in which he tells just why he makes use of the antique device. He admits, in beginning, that "incidental music" needs excuse, that it is an offense to refined taste. But, he continues, "I find myself in the world, surrounded and to some extent harassed by its conditions. An audience, no matter how deeply interested or absorbed it may become, is unable to maintain absolute quiet. The individuals composing it must breathe; they must occasionally move, or cough, or gasp, or shuffle feet, or rustle programmes, or make other involuntary disturbances. In the performance of my own plays I am in the habit of resorting largely to the effects of natural pauses, intervals of silence—of moments where few words are spoken and much mental struggle is supposed to take place. These methods I find especially effective at the most critical junctures. It is precisely at such moments that an intensely absorbed audience will be utterly demoralized by the least individual disturbance in its midst. Now a low, scarcely audible strain of music seems to prevent such a catastrophe. While it by no means drowns other sounds, it tends, if in harmony with the situation on the stage, to keep the attention from being diverted. I therefore resort to it. To speak in somewhat plain terms, if there is to be a noise during some of my especially critical scenes, I prefer to make it myself and have it somewhat, if not entirely, harmonize with the matter in hand." That, it must be granted, is a pretty good explanation. It comes from beyond the footlights, at any rate, and therefore is of interest and possibly of value.

—There seems to be no good reason for placing upon Dr. LEYDS the responsibility for the rebuff which Mr. KRUEGER has just received from the German Emperor. Dr. LEYDS lacks neither intelligence nor experience, and it can be safely assumed that if his advice was asked or he had an opportunity to offer it, he fully instructed Mr. KRUEGER as to the methods commonly followed in seeking a royal audience. The truth is, probably, that the old Boer leader was deceived as well as elated by his experiences in France, and that, ignoring or missing the real significance of his first welcome, he hastily concluded that he could make a triumphal tour of all Europe. The swift removal of his delusion was somewhat cruel in its Teutonic harshness, but it may have been both necessary and wholesome as well. He now knows exactly where he stands, and out of his hopelessness of obtaining substantial aid from any quarter there may arise appreciation of the wicked folly of continuing a struggle tending inevitably toward the complete destruction of his people. It is not inconceivable, however, that he voluntarily invited the rebuff by which he is supposed to have been so surprised. If he has half the shrewdness with which he is credited, the attitude of the French Government, as cautious as courteous, must have convinced him that his mission would be without results. But conviction was not enough; he had to have public and indubitable evidence that further effort was useless. This he now has, and it will serve very well as his explanation to the scattered commandoes in the Transvaal.

—New York's abandonment of the naval arch scheme is a source of intense satisfaction to all the other cities—Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and the like—that suffer from a permanent and irrepressible resentment against New York because her superiority makes it impossible for them to think of themselves as great cities. Their joy does not arise directly from the fact that the arch is not to be built—the hopeless jealousy doesn't go as far as that—but it is due rather to a curious belief that our determination in this matter illustrates our lack of patriotism and our slight regard for art in any form not obviously profitable. That delusion is very dear to the inhabitants of the American hinterland, and any episode that gives it the semblance of support sets them to chuckling delightedly for weeks. Just now they are saying that in a rashly emotional moment New York determined to build an arch, but when it came to raising the requisite money the emotion vanished and the plan fell through. Of course this is an absurd misstatement of the case. It was not New York, but certain New Yorkers, that decided to build the arch, and they would have succeeded if they had been favored by ordinary good luck. It was not at all a matter of money. Circumstances over which neither New York nor the certain New Yorkers had any control—circumstances which it is the reverse of necessary to rehearse at this time—produced a change in public sentiment, diverted interest in other directions, and rendered it wise to return the contributions that had been already received. What our dear critics forget is the fact that New York was under no obligation to construct this monument, and that failure to do it implies no dereliction from any imaginable duty. Neither the generosity nor the patriotism of New York needs demonstration.

—Gov. PINGREE of Michigan has pardoned two National Guard officers of high rank who had been convicted of having conspired successfully to rob the State in the furnishing of supplies. One of the officers claimed to have been deprived of a fair trial, while the other excused his crime on the curious ground that he had been overpersuaded by others who had shared in the profits. The Governor seems to have found weight in this explanation, for he bases his exercise of leniency on the failure of the Circuit Judge and District Attorney in the county where the thefts were committed to make any efforts toward bringing the other criminals to justice. In other words, because all the thieves were not punished, he will not permit the punishment of two of them, or even of the one who has confessed his guilt. This decision must have been reached by reasoning of characteristic crookedness. Admitting that full justice had not been done, what prevented Gov. PINGREE from exercising the power and influence which his high office gives him and so forcing action against those "prominent citizens of Kalamazoo" to whom he refers in such scathing terms? And perhaps, too, the terms would have been somewhat more scathing than they are now if he had mentioned the names of the objects of his indignation. His failure to do so hints at some uncertainty about the facts and a consequent reluctance to assume legal responsibility for the charges made. However this may be, the Governor's course does not commend itself to the distant observer. The convicted officers made a very good beginning, and the freeing of them seems little likely to render easier the punishment of their accomplices, if they had any. But it is of small use to argue about the workings of the mind of a man like Gov. PINGREE. His intentions may be excellent, but his peculiarities are innumerable, his inconsistencies almost as many, and his judgment is not the foundation of his fame.

FOR MARRIED MEN WHO STAY OUT NIGHTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There are a large number of men in Greater New York who are debarred from taking the part they would like in public affairs, owing to the strenuous and effective work of their wives. These women have nothing against their husbands' ideas of personal responsibility and influence in civic life, but they do object to being left alone o' nights while the man of the house is attending a club or society meeting. To be sure, the husband is usually the physical superior of the woman to whom he has given his name, and, as a rule, could use muscular measures to crush out any opposition to his nocturnal goings and comings, but for obvious reasons these tactics are not to be recommended. Moral suasion in a good many cases is fruitless, and the matter usually ends in the male animal either being nagged into staying home or his leaving home feeling very much in mind as if he were a bloodthirsty brute. On the one hand he is prevented from illuminating his club by his efforts and presence, and, on the other, he arrives at the meeting in a mental condition far from satisfactory. When he arrives home he scents the reprisals that are to come, and come they will in the hundreds of little ways familiar to "lovely woman."

The poor fellow in all this has been perfectly guiltless of intentional harm; nay, he may even have offered to take the lady along, but very likely she has refused because the club's objects are not to her liking. He is in a dilemma from which there is no way of escape. He must either bid farewell to the glory and applause which his impromptu speech would evoke from the members of the club, (it has taken him three weeks to write it, perhaps,) he must forego that sense of being an active factor in affairs which interest him, that he may stay home to keep the wife of his bosom in fairly good humor and incidentally mind the baby; or, he must have the wifely wrath, slink away to his club, tortured by his feelings, and then return to find the deuce to pay at home, and hysterics on top. Can THE TIMES wonder that the city is so much in need of reform when many of its best reformers are kept in at night by their wives and practically governed there without consent? These poor fellows have my warmest sympathy, and I herewith propose the following plan for their emancipation:

The formation of a Married Men's Shut-In Association, to include in its membership all married men who are not allowed to go out at night, and those who can get out but who suffer great mental anguish in the operation. The object of the association shall be to console its members by an interchange and an exchange of letters on various interesting topics. Fees for membership and dues shall be allowed to accumulate until a sum sufficient to establish and maintain a "Wives' Night Nursery" is secured. This nursery is to be managed along the line of the day nurseries in this city. When this object is accomplished the members of the association shall bring their wives and families to the nursery every club night, and receive a tin check in exchange. The members can then go to the clubs they affect, and on returning stop at the nursery and present the check, receiving the wife and family back again. The wives and families in the meantime will be good company for each other, and everything will roll along in the most joyous and delightful manner. The scheme will increase marital felicity at least 50 per cent. and "fill a long-felt want." Our brethren thus made free will rush into civic affairs generally and reform things in the most approved manner. The many good points of this scheme will at once appeal to the anti-imperialists, and I hope they will boost it along vigorously.

ATROPHY IN THE CHURCHES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with much interest the communication on "Apathy in the Churches" in your issue of Dec. 3. I also am a layman, and desire to approach this subject with due reverence, but, in my opinion, if "atrophy"—a wasting away from want of proper nourishment—be substituted for "apathy" I think we shall come nearer the source of the difficulty referred to. As a rule, I hardly think the laity are very much disturbed in their beliefs by the differences among the clergy on what they deem non-essential theological points. We believe in all the cardinal points of our religion and pay very little attention to what the clergyman may happen to think on the subject, unless he offensively intrudes his peculiar notions in the pulpit or elsewhere, and then we leave the church.

The case stands with the laity about as it does with a jury in a court of justice. The lawyers, in summing up, oftentimes try to beog the facts, but when we get in the jury room the facts, as we see them, are the only things that influence us. The "nice points of law" we care nothing about. We are there to do "justice," and lawyers admit that justice is generally done by juries. And so I think we must look in some other direction for the shortcomings referred to by your correspondent "Pilgrim."

So far as men are concerned, the reason why fewer go to church than formerly, and consequently feel less disposed to attend to their religious duties, is because they are not appealed to properly from the pulpit. By this I mean they are not interested or instructed by the average sermon, and find it a "bore" to sit and listen to it. I know this to be the fact with a considerable number of my friends, because they have told me so.

Now, if the sermon is the deterrent to churchgoing—as I believe it in very many instances to be—why should we make it "obligatory" for people who don't like the sermons and are not benefited by them to remain in church while these homilies are being delivered? To avoid the sermon many go to early church, but it is very uncomfortable, to say the least, for a man who has to work hard all the week to get up earlier on Sunday than any other day.

Why cannot the service be arranged in all our churches so as to make it "optional" with the congregation whether they remain or not for the sermon, without appearing discourteous by walking out just before it begins? If this were done, it would operate advantageously in several ways. In the first place, it would largely increase the attendance at the "essential" part of the service, and it would intimate in tones that cannot be misunderstood that the incumbent is "persona non grata" so far as his homilies are concerned, and spur him up to better and stronger endeavors in this direction.

What the laity want and what they would enjoy are sermons on "practical Christianity," interspersed with anecdotes and illustrations. The parables of our Saviour were sermons taken from everyday life and thoroughly understood and appreciated by the masses. When Christ spoke He never had an inattentive or a wearied audience, and multitudes followed, without food or shelter, to hear Him. Let us have more of His spirit, in our pulpits and out of them.

KNICKERBOCKER.

New York, Dec. 4, 1900.

A Roman Catholic's Views.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The communication of "Pilgrim" in today's TIMES is interesting to the Catholic mind, showing as it does undoubted sincerity, and considerable helplessness. He pays a tribute to Catholic zeal, but misses the cause of it. He says "the Catholic thinks the doctrines of his Church worthy of belief, and has unswerving faith in them," but he assigns no reason for this. Let me supply it. It is because the Catholic knows the Church with its undeniable Apostolic succession to be the infallible interpreter of the Word of God.

The light of the Holy Ghost, through the sacraments conferred by the Church, leads his reason to embrace everything she teaches, so that far from being any conflict between faith and reason each is supported by the other. "Pilgrim" would have the preacher "give laymen something to stand on, a sure foothold," but this implies authority, and the only sure authoritative foothold is the Word of God interpreted by the Apostles, who succeed each other in the Roman Catholic Church.

A SONG OF TOIL.

Folger McKinsey in Baltimore News.

I take the little kiss she gives when I go forth at morn,
I take the little farewell wish upon the breezes borne;
I take her little arms' caress and in the morning light
Go out into the world of toil, the battle for the right.
Ring, anvils, with your clangor!
Burn, forges, fierce and far!
The night shall bring the world of home,
Where love and goodness are!

I lean to little lips she lifts to my rough lips of love,
I read the mother-hope that shines in eyes that gleam above;
I hear the roaring city call, and unto it I go
Light-hearted for the stress because a child heart loves me so.
Swing, hammers, with your clatter!
Whirl, wheels, and shaft and beam!
The light of love shall guide me home
From out this shroud of steam!

I take the little rose she holds and pin it on my breast,
I take the tender memory of her word that cheered and blest;
I face the argent purpose of the labor that is mine,
Filled with her trust and patience, her youth and faith divine.
Plunge, cities, with your thunder
Of traffic-shout and roar!
I take the task and do the deed,
While she waits at the door!

I take the task, I face the toil, I deem it sweet to be Bound to the labor that is love for love's fine liberty;
From morning unto eventide, remembering her I go,
Under the bending wheel that glides forever to and fro.
Sing, mills, your clattering chorus,
Down where the millions sweat!
I bare my arms and give my strength
And joy in what I get!

I give and take, and give again, and unto dark am bent
Beneath the burden of the task for which sweet life is spent;
But, ah! the wage so dear to have, the little lips that wait,
The hearts that ring, the arms that cling, when I unlatch the gate!
Clang with your mighty revel!
Roar, cities, with your strife!
And God be praised for strength to toil
For wage of love and life!

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"Been down in Pennsylvania riding to hounds a bit," gossiped a lounger at one of the up-town riding academies, "trying out a couple of Virginia hunters. Good horses, good sport, shrewd foxes, and nice people down that way. It's a dozen years since my first experience there, and then I had a run about the Valley Forge country, where there was a good pack of hounds and some good stiff country well worth the riding over. They then told me the hunt had been in existence for more than a century. There was a lot of interest taken in it, because the runs were over the historical country where Washington and his ragged army put in one of the worst Winters the little band of patriots ever got up against. Naturally a fellow'd think that a hunt with such a history and in such a country would have survived. Patriotic-like to keep it up, you know. But this year the hounds are scattered and the hunt abandoned. Sort of melted away without any very good reason for it that I can see. The kennels were right in sight of the place where Washington had his headquarters, too, and his officers had many a run over it. Too bad it's abandoned. Strange, too, with a country so full of hunting men as that section is. But the country isn't fashionable, and so the young men ride with the Taylor and Westchester hunts for their sport. The Valley Forge kennels have been abandoned and the dogs have mostly been put into the Taylor pack. Possibly the name, Washington Hunt of Valley Forge, didn't suit the young men down that way who have been sort of inoculated with Anglophobia by riding with the youngsters from Philadelphia way, who want everything to have an English flavor just now. But that's only a whim of mine. I'm one of the Sons of the Revolution, you know, and I may be a trifle touchy on Toryism."

Even the department stores have been struck by the dramatic craze of the hour. Maude Adams buttons have appeared in the stores with the features of the actress stamped on the face of the ornaments. Belt clasps, too, have appeared with her features and figure in the character of the Duc de Reichstadt, the whole inclosed in the figure of an eagle with outstretched wings. Of course they are L'Aiglon buttons and L'Aiglon belt clasps, and they are selling like the proverbial hot cakes.

It might not be a bad idea for the Trinity corporation to have organized within its close membership a "Society for the Preservation of Tombstones in the Burying Ground of the Churchyard." Visitors to that one of the down-town city sights note that many of the stones that mark the last resting places of a host of men whose names were more or less famous in New York's earlier history are rapidly decaying and falling in pieces. So very rapid is the decay that soon the inscriptions will be unrecognizable unless something is done to preserve them.

"These motor cars do a man up quicker than anything else he can be forced into as a means of earning a living," said a veteran at the business as he handed in his resignation and badge and bade goodbye to the starter at the Fiftieth Street station. "When I came to handle one of them I was as stout and healthy a young buck as ever twisted a brake. I had driven horses in front of a car for three years in all sorts of weather, and never knew what it was to have an ache or a pain. Then came the electrics. I had no trouble in getting a job, as I had a good record behind me. First off I had an attack of the nerves caused by trying to prevent the car from running over women and children who would not get out of the way, no matter how hard I clanged the bell. I couldn't sleep o' nights for it at first, but finally got steadied down a bit. Then I began to have twitchings in my right leg when I sat down. Doctor said it was due to the fact that I overworked the leg stamping on the button to ring the car bell. That bothers me still, but has become so much of a habit that I don't notice it much. Then followed enlargement of the joints of the right arm due to the constant use of the lever in braking the car. That takes a lot of strength about a thousand times a day. Now comes the climax in some sort of a kidney disease, which the doctor says is brought on by having to stand in one position for so many hours. It doubles me up at night, and I suffer so that I can't sleep. As there was nothing else for me to do, I've chucked up the whole thing and am going to try a hand at trucking and see if I've got life enough left to make a go at that. Talk about an iron constitution being necessary to carry a man through a motorman's life! Iron isn't in it, for a lot of men with Harveyized steel constitutions when they came to work at it are now tottering about town, total wrecks. Running a motor car is the toughest thing a man can be asked to do, and I'm thinking a man had better commit suicide at once than take it up as a means of earning a living."

He was descanting with vigor on the exceptional quality of the dinners that are served at one of the fashionable clubs of Brooklyn at a very low figure for a first-class meal on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays. Equally toothsome luncheons could be had on other days of the week, but dinners in course were on those days.

"And why on only those three days?" queried the New Yorker, to whom the delights of life in Brooklyn were being rehearsed.

"Wash day, ironing day, and the girl's day out," quickly responded one of the ladies of the party. "That's no sort of a conundrum to a woman who has ever had the care of a house. Better try a harder one next time unless you happen to be in a stag party."

"It's the result of trying to acclimatize them West India fish up here," said the Hibernian attendant at the Aquarium, when asked about a peculiarly exasperating cough with which the West India seal was waking the echoes of the remodeled Castle Garden. "At least, that's what them folks up stairs tells us; I calls it premonitory symptoms of pneumonia, for that's what his mate died of. Ought to have acclimatized 'em gradual like, I think, 'stead of keepin' 'em in water that's seventy degrees temperature all the while, and so make 'em used to the climate. It's that hot here because of all them dago fish that's being acclimatized, that all us attendants is kept in a dripping sweat, and liable to catch a death o' cold every time we leave here to go home. Them fish'd live all right in water at a natural temperature if they'd let 'em, and then we wouldn't have to roast here year in and year out. Better look out for the men instead of the fish, says I."

Shortly after the Knickerbocker Athletic Club was started here with such a blare of trumpets and such a model clubhouse a lot of Providence men caught the athletic fever. A magnificent clubhouse was built on Weybosset Street, the principal one of the town. There was a dedication with a huge flourish of trumpets and all that sort of thing by the Providence Athletic Association. But a short time after being housed there began to be a falling off of interest in the club, as it was found that the social and athletic members could not meet on a common ground. Then there came the usual crash, a receiver, and an abandonment of the house. Now the clubhouse is in the market, and one of the proprietors of a big hotel here has been approached as to his willingness to take the clubhouse, after it has been remodeled, to run it as a hotel, in New York style. Providence needs a modern hotel badly, as the best one there, the Narragansett, is something more than a generation old, and, though somewhat pretentious, is still run after the fashion of at least a quarter of a century ago. So the proposed conversion will be a public gain, even though it is an athletic loss.

Here is a rather novel complaint made by a young lawyer from Atlanta, a Georgian, to whom the hurry and bustle of New York life has not yet become as satisfying and fascinating as it will later on. Spoken in his quaint and musical Southern dialect and with a touch of homesickness in his voice, it was almost pathetic to hear him say: "There are too many people here; altogether too many; and they always crowd you so. You can't get a seat in a car, the sidewalks are so crowded you can't move about without being jostled in a very ungentlemanly fashion; there is no repose anywhere. I went to the Museum of Natural History with my sister to escape the jam, and people pushed us about and crowded in front of us at the cases, and we found no more rest there than in the big department stores, where it seems as if the purpose of every one was to crush every other one if possible. There positively isn't room to do shopping anywhere. You even stand in line at a restaurant in order to get a chance to eat a meal. There's a crush everywhere, and New York is too crowded for comfort, both day and night. I would so like to find a spot where I could move without treading on some one's toes, or having mine trod on."

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

French Pronunciation in English Plays —Industrious M. Piron—"Shenandoah" to be Anglicized.

The supposed vanity, ignorance, evil influence, immorality, and vulgarity of the commercial theatre are favorite topics of discussion, especially with folks who rarely go to the theatre unless they get free tickets. It is well, therefore, when something can be said on the other side of the question, just for the sake of variety.

The demand for copies of the original French version of "L'Aiglon," because of the interest in Rostand's work excited by the performances of Mme. Bernhardt and Miss Maude Adams, has already been widely commented upon. The book will not be on sale here until after the middle of December, and the orders already received cannot be filled until long after that time. There is no need to dwell on the good that is thus done in setting thousands of persons to reading and studying so fine a work of literary art.

But an even more remarkable instance of the wide and good educational influence the contemporary theatre may exert is at hand. There is at the present moment scarcely a copy of Shakespeare's "Henry V." in any of the single volume editions of sufficient merit, critically speaking, to commend itself to students of Shakespeare on sale in the bookshops, and all the dealers have orders to fill for which they are awaiting new supplies. Mansfield's superb revival of the historical play has thus exerted an influence on the young mind which a hundred literary lecturers and a thousand essayists with printed books could not equal.

A quarter of a century ago Samuel Phelps declared that "the perpetual iteration of Shakespeare's words, if nothing more, going on daily for so many months of the year, must produce a good effect on the public mind," and he based on that idea his plea for the subsidization in London of a playhouse devoted entirely to Shakespeare. How much more public good is accomplished when the theatre actually sets so many thousands of people to reading and studying Shakespeare who have not read and studied him before!

The pronunciation of the simplest and commonest French words on the theatrical stage is often ludicrous even in our best theatres. In the performance of the "Sprightly Marseac" piece at the Theatre Republic, however, the treatment of that ticklish word "Monsieur" seems unique in its ineptness and unintentional drollery. All possible changes are rung on the word, and no two of the actors use the same term. "Mo-Sewer" is the one favored by a supposedly comic waiter, who uses it a dozen times in five minutes. But all the attempts to secure a French atmosphere in this new picture, the comic side of the Bohemian life of Paris, are equally hopeless.

Now that the single performance of "Tartufe," contemplated by the French players at the Garden Theatre, must be postponed until their return to New York in the Spring because of the present demand for "L'Aiglon," there may be a chance that Mme. Bernhardt will reconsider her plan to act Elmire, for it is best a thankless rôle, and take on the character of Dorine, just as Coquelin has decided to reject the robes and beard of Polonius in "Hamlet" and take up the Gravedigger's jacket and spade. Everybody knows just how perfectly Bernhardt would act Elmire, but the rôle would give her few opportunities, while in Dorine she might fairly dazzle and amaze us. Surely she still has all the grace and vivacity the part requires and could act the Molière soubrette so as to put all her contemporaries to shame. It was this rôle Rachel failed in when she tried to act it for her benefit.

There are many old friends of frequenters of performances of French plays in this city in the company at the Garden Theatre. But few of them have been conspicuously placed in "L'Aiglon." Mme. Mea has a chance as Marie Louise, but Mme. Fairy, Mme. Kerwich, and some of the others have very little to do. One actor who has done heroic service in the cause of French dramatic art on this continent, however, has plenty of employment in Rostand's play, though it is all of a humble sort. This is M. Piron. He appears as Baron d'Obenaus, the Prince's history tutor, in Act I., and in Act II. is one of the police spies serving as lackeys at Schonbrunn. Thereafter he is an honest mountaineer, who yearns to be a craftsman in the city, a vociferous Austrian masquerader, ridiculing the Bonaparte myth, an ardent Bonapartist conspirator, anxious that Napoleon II. shall remember his name. He is the zealous artist in each and every rôle, the same trustworthy Piron as of yore.

"The Late Mr. Castello," Sydney Grundy's comedy, which the Murray Hill company is acting this week, is closely associated with the career of Mary Manning. Daniel Frohman held the American rights to this piece, and while in London went to a suburban theatre to see it acted by a travelling company in which Miss Manning, then known on the stage as Florence Friend, was leading lady. Her charming portrayal of innocent and afflicted Sadie so strongly impressed Mr. Frohman that he determined to engage the actress for his Lyceum company at any cost, and it so fell out that "The Late Mr. Castello" not only secured Miss Manning her American engagement, but also her first hit in this country. For "The Courtship of Leonie," by Esmond, in which she made her début at the Lyceum, failed, and when "The Late Mr. Castello" took its place, charmingly coy Sadie put the young actress high in the esteem of critical playgoers.

Perhaps, therefore, it is a happy omen for Miss Manning that the piece should be current just on the eve of her first starring engagement in New York. Grundy's comedy is one of the things the Murray Hill actors do surprisingly well, with tact and delicacy of expression, and as a bit of merry satire it has had no equal in the recent output of English plays.

How can Bronson Howard ever adapt the story and situations of his "Shenandoah" to the incidents of the Boer-English war? That is exactly what they say he is going to try to do. Can it be possible he is going to give the Londoners a lovely Boer heroine? That seems out of question. Yet it must be either that or a Boer hero and most of the other personages Boers, too, and a Boer victory as a climax, which is not to be thought of. In fact, "Shenandoah" seems an essentially and untranslatably American play.

Edwin H. Vanderfelt, who died lately in London, is well remembered here as an actor. He supported Mme. Modjeska in 1886 as Orlando, Valentine, Orsino, and Armand Duval, and for a whole season, soon afterward, he appeared as the hero of the melodrama called "Harbor Lights" at the Boston Museum. He was a capable and studious actor, but he never gained greater distinction than is indicated in that brief statement of his best-known work.

Abby Sage Richardson, whose sudden death in Rome will greatly shock and grieve her many friends in New York, was not long associated with the stage as an actress and had not given all her efforts, or, perhaps, even the best of them in her later years, to writing for the theatre. Old stagers remember well her appearance at the Winter Garden in 1886 as Narissa in "The Merchant of Venice" to the Shylock of Edwin Booth and the Portia of Marie Methua Scheller. She had lately won some sort of fame and earned some money as the author, or associate author, of popular plays, especially "The Pride of Jennico." But she was best known as a lecturer and essayist, who had sound claims to recognition for her scholarship and taste, and in her social life her sympathy with all earnest and noble work constituted her the friend and wise counselor of many aspiring young artists. She will be greatly missed.

"TRAVIATA" AT THE OPÉRA.

At the Metropolitan Opera House last night the Metropolitan English Grand Opera Company projected its emotional content into the vasty spaces of the auditorium through the medium of Signor Verdi's version of "La Dame aux Camelias," known to Italians as "La Traviata," and—according to last night's programme—by the same name to English-speaking persons. The translation of "La Traviata" is "The Lost One," but that is so ineffably silly that no one has ever yet ventured to call it by that title in this town. But the opera by any other title is just as silly. There is no use disguising the fact that Verdi's opera is about out of date, and it is tolerable only when some great soprano undertakes the title rôle. As a "stock" opera—performed by a stock opera company—it is not to be endured.

The performance of the opera at the Metropolitan last night was not one of distinguished merit. The vocal refinements needed to give savor to the threadbare melodies of the work are conspicuously absent from the work of the company. Few of its members can boast of more than good voices, good intentions, and some experience—much of it unfortunate. The Violetta Valeri last night was Miss Phoebe Strakosch, who was not happy in her work. Mr. Lloyd d'Aubigne was a feeble and colorless Alfredo. The only pleasing singing of the evening was contributed by Mr. Paull, whose delivery was excellent had it not been directly at the audience. The other personages do not call for mention. The audience was small and seemed to like it.

R. G. KNOWLES TO RETURN.

Will Fill an Engagement on the Keith Circuit of Theatres.

The White Star liner Majestic, which sailed from Liverpool for this port yesterday, had among her passengers R. G. Knowles, a vaudeville actor, who comes to this country under contract to B. F. Keith to fill an engagement on the Keith circuit of theatres. Mr. Knowles is an American actor, who was identified with the Haverly minstrels, farce companies, and with Augustin Daly's forces. Ten years ago he went to London with Hoyt's "Trip to Chinatown" company, appearing in the character of Welland Strong, a rôle he achieved considerable success in.

He has never been seen in the continuous houses of this country, and his engagement in this city at Keith's Union Square Theatre will begin Dec. 24, after which he will return to England to fill contracts calling for his appearances well along into 1903, after which it is his intention to retire from the stage. During his engagement in this city he will present a sketch entitled "Trifles That Trouble a Traveler," which offers an amusing description of the curious persons one meets on a trip across the Atlantic. Mr. Knowles will be accompanied by his wife, who has a prominent reputation in the English vaudeville profession as a banjoist. She will assist in Mr. Knowles's work, which is a comedy lecture, however, and not a sketch.

THE STROLLERS AT YONKERS.

YONKERS, N. Y., Dec. 5.—Music Hall was crowded to-night at the initial performance of "The Cruise of a Summer Girl," by The Strollers. All Yonkers society turned out, and many New Yorkers came up. The announcement that the Duke of Manchester would attend caused many to attend to get a glimpse of him, and they suffered a disappointment, as the Duke did not put in an appearance. This was the only disappointment of the evening. The play was a hit. The parts were all well carried and the staging and costuming excellent. The production abounded with hits upon prevailing fashions and manners, methods and society usages.

Miss Grace Hoyt and Louis Fitzgerald, Jr., scored the greatest successes. The latter's cakewalk steps in the very beginning made a hit which caused his recall several times. The chorus was excellent, and was recalled repeatedly. The piece itself is a long one, and the numerous recalls caused it to hold the audience until well toward midnight, but the audience seemed willing to stay.

Although only in the nature of a dress rehearsal the production to-night was not marred by any long waits; in fact, the last intermission was cut short owing to the delay resulting from recalls.

THE OTT FAMILY BENEFIT.

List of Volunteers Includes Leading Performers Now in the City.

A programme full of interesting numbers will be offered at the New York Theatre this afternoon at the benefit performance which is being given in aid of the widow and children of "Joe" Ott. The programme includes Charles Ross and Mabel Fenton, May Edouin in the drinking song from "Florodora," Weber and Fields, Peter F. Dailey and company, Dan Daly, Lillian Russell, a scene from "The Star and Garter," in which Otis Harlan will appear; Marie Dressler, De Wolf Hopper, Truly Shattuck, Virginia Earle, Lawrence Hanley, Dolly Mestayer, the Earl of Yarmouth and Miss Margaret Mayo in "A Matrimonial Muddle," Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Pauline Hall, and many others.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Three hundred students of the Dramatist Club of this city have secured seats at the Theatre Republic for next Monday night.

The week's theatricals will be marked by a special matinée performance this afternoon at the Bijou Theatre of "Madge Smith, Attorney," by May Irwin.

An elaborate revival of Frank Mayo's dramatization of Mark Twain's "Pudd'nhead Wilson" will be made next season, and the probabilities are that Sam S. Shubert, general manager of the Herald Square Theatre, will give the production the same season in London.

On the American liner St. Louis, which sailed yesterday morning, were Thomas Davis, the manager of the Lyric and the Adelphi Theatres, London; Miss Madge Lessing, and Miss Phyllis Rankin. Both actresses are under contract to Mr. Davis. Miss Rankin will take Ada Reeve's part in "Florodora," and Miss Lessing will join the Davis forces in April. Before doing so, however she will take part in the Christmas pantomime at the Drury Lane Theatre.

Rudolph Aronson announces that he will offer a prize of $50 to any individual suggesting an appropriate title for the new Johann Strauss operetta to be produced at the Broadway Theatre on Jan. 21. The original German title of the opera is "Wiener Blut," "Vienna Temperament," the plot of which deals with the infatuation of an Austrian blue-blood for the prima ballerina of the Vienna Opera House. The intricacies of the story bring in romance, politics, and intrigue, and a large amount of comedy on the order of "The Fledermaus." The only stipulation asked is that on account of the scene being laid on the banks of the River Danube it is considered proper that the word "Danube" shou'd be part of the title. All communications must be addressed to Rudolph Aronson, Room 99, Astor Court, 20 West Thirty-fourth Street, and suggestions will be received up to Christmas Day.

AN UP-TOWN PICTURE SALE.

There will be sold at the Fifth Avenue Art Galleries this evening and to-morrow evening some 153 pictures from the collections of H. M. Baker and J. W. Williamson, for the most part by American artists. The display is not an important one, but among the canvases there are a number which would be desirable additions to collections, especially of American pictures. Such for example, are the two landscapes by Califano, a good example of C. Warren Eaton, "The Quiet Hour"; two or three good canvases by Henry T. Smith, two more than usually good Edward Morans, a fair Bristol, and fair to good examples of the foreigners Chalon, Richet, Jacomin, Pettitjean, and Timmermans.

In the same galleries on Friday and Saturday evenings will be sold 207 black and whites, which include original drawings, by many of the best-known illustrators and by such artists as Bolton Jones, Gilbert Gaul, F. S. Church, C. D. Weldon, H. W. Ranger, and Julian Rix. There is also a characteristic oil by Frederic Remington, "An Indian Sun Dance."

Power House to be Rebuilt.

There will be no delay by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company in rebuilding the Ridgewood power house, which was burned Tuesday afternoon. Arrangements were made with the Edison Electric Light Company and the Coney Island Railroad Company to supply electric power until the other power houses of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company were enabled to establish communication with the wires which supplied the lines of cars that got their power from the burned power house.

For the Doerflinger Fund, $10.

THE NEW YORK TIMES has received $10 from H. S. Marior, Brooklyn, Conn., for the Doerflinger fund, and has forwarded the money to Our Animal Protective League at 289 Fourth Avenue.

ABBY SAGE RICHARDSON DIES IN ROME, ITALY

Son with Her at the Time—Demise Recalls a Romantic Incident in the Writer's Early Life.

Mrs. Abby Sage Richardson died yesterday morning in Rome, Italy. A cablegram from her son to Daniel Frohman, received last night, stated that the cause of her death was pneumonia. On last Sunday Mr. Frohman had word that she was ill, but that hopes were entertained for her recovery.

When she left here on Oct. 6, Mrs. Richardson was not in the best of health, and it was her intention to remain abroad for a year, spending the Winter on the Continent and the greater part of next Summer in London. She was accompanied by her son, William Sage, the novelist. For a month they staid in Paris, going thence to Italy. Besides her son, there was with Mrs. Richardson at the time of her death a Dr. Thorp of London, who was her personal friend, and whose family she intended to visit while in England next Summer.

Abby Sage was Mrs. Richardson's maiden name. Her first husband was Daniel MacFarland, a lawyer and a speculator in the West. After being divorced from him she became engaged to the late Albert Deane Richardson, for a long time the civil war correspondent of The New York Tribune and afterward an editor on that paper. MacFarland assassinated Richardson in The Tribune office in 1869, and Mrs. MacFarland was married to the latter on his deathbed, the ceremony being performed in the Astor House by the Revs. Henry Ward Beecher and O. B. Frothingham. MacFarland, when tried for murder, was acquitted on the ground of emotional insanity, and the verdict, though at the time it was severely criticised, came to be credited as a good one as a result of the eccentricities developed later by the defendant. He is believed to have died in obscurity since that time.

Mrs. Richardson was born in Massachusetts in 1837. Among her ancestors were many Puritans and Pilgrims. Early in life she showed the taste for literature and the fondness for writing that resulted in her wide reputation as a critic, dramatist, poet, and translator. It was in the early sixties that she married MacFarland, who was at the time a man beyond middle life. They had two children, William and Percy. In 1868 came the divorce proceedings, and the wife was easily successful in her suit, as her husband had already practically deserted, besides having subjected her to all manner of ill-treatment. The assassination of Mr. Richardson occurred in the year following the divorce.

During the civil war, being obliged to find some way to support herself and her children, Mrs. Richardson gave literary readings and had several positions as a teacher, both in schools and in private circles. After the war was over she went on the stage, playing Shakespearean parts in the company of Edwin Booth at the Winter Garden Theatre.

Leaving the "boards" after the tragedy that left her a widow of the man she had married only a short while before his death, she began to write, and ever since then her pen had been active. Among the books published under her name were "Familiar Talks on English Literature," "Old Love Letters," "Stories from Old English Poetry," "The History of Our Country," and "Abelard and Heloise, a Mediaeval Romance." She was the editor of "Songs from the Old Dramatists" and of "Garnered Sheaves," the latter being a collection of the writings of Mr. Richardson.

Of late years she had figured as a dramatist. Many of the best-adapted French plays that have been produced by Daniel Frohman were translated by her, among them being Sardou's "Americans Abroad" and "A Woman's Silence." It was in the last-named piece that Miss Georgia Cayvan appeared on the stage for the last time. Mrs. Richardson also assisted Mr. Frohman in the revising of manuscripts that were presented to him.

She wrote, in collaboration with Miss Grace Furniss, "The Comic Girl." The same two together dramatized "The Pride of Jennico," in which James K. Hackett is now appearing. Mrs. Richardson's last work was the writing of a play from Stanley J. Weyman's "Sophia," and her dramatization will be used by Daniel Frohman in the near future. She intended, while in Europe during the next twelve months, to adapt to the stage the successful novel, "Robert Tournay," written by her son, William Sage.

Mrs. Richardson is survived by her two sons, who were awarded to her after the divorce and then assumed the maiden name of their mother, and by her brother, William Sage, who is engaged in literary work in this city. The youngest son, Percy, is now in Texas with Daniel Frohman's "Prisoner of Zenda" Company, of which he is the manager. He also manages the "Rupert of Hentzau" Company.

Mrs. Richardson's home here was at 256 West One Hundredth Street, whither there often assembled gatherings of the best-known literary men and women of the day. Among her friends were William Dean Howells, Aldrich, Stedman, Margaret Sangster, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Mary Mapes Dodge, Julia Rounds, and many others equally celebrated.

RECTOR BLANCHETT WINS.

Up-to-date election methods, including the challenging of votes and the rights of voters, were features at the annual election of Zion Protestant Episcopal Church of Douglastown, Queens County, on Tuesday. There was a fight on between the Vestrymen and the rector, the Rev. Jean Baptiste Blanchett.

William B. Griffiths, clerk of the vestry, and one of the rector's opponents, questioned the regularity of Howard Perry's attendance at church, but the answer was satisfactory.

Howard A. Sperry, the rector's lawyer, read a decision of the Court of Appeals, in which the rule was established that to be considered a regular attendant a person must have been present more times in a year than he had been absent.

"I have been here more than twenty-six times," said Mr. Griffiths.

The rector than flashed a notebook.

"You have been here for twelve full services and five partial services," he said. "I have the dates."

Mr. Griffiths lost his vote.

"I have," said Mr. Sperry. "Challenge sustained," said the rector. The bell ringer lost his vote.

GEORGE E. MALTBY A SUICIDE.

Fatally Shoots Himself at the Grand Union Hotel.

George E. Maltby, a clerk in the office of the Consolidated Gas Company, and the son of George Maltby, a produce merchant of 329 Washington Street, who shot himself shortly before midnight on Tuesday, in the Grand Union Hotel, died in Bellevue Hospital early yesterday morning. He was thirty years old, and lived with his wife and two children at 17 Merton Street.

He registered at the hotel on Monday night, giving his residence as Omaha, Neb. Three letters, one of them addressed to his wife, and a few cents were found in his pockets.

The suicide's father said that he had long been expecting bad news of his son. "He was always very queer," he said. "I don't think his head was quite right. He was incorrigible at times. He received a good education, but never did much toward earning his living. He was married two years ago. A short time ago he started to work for the gas company."

Elevated Station Damaged by Fire.

The Lorimer Street station of the Broadway line of the Brooklyn elevated was damaged by fire to the extent of $500 early yesterday morning. The fire was discovered shortly after 4 o'clock by a night porter. Nobody was on the premises when the fire started, and the porter at the time was going from one station to another. He quickly turned in an alarm, and on the arrival of the firemen the blaze was extinguished. There was only a light fire in the waiting room stove, and the blaze was on the opposite side of the room.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Cards for coming-out receptions, dances, dinners, and card parties are now being delivered by messenger and post through the fashionable districts of the city in such numbers as to resemble a stage snowstorm. Not for years, at this early period of the Winter season, has there been such an avalanche of cards. The season promises to be the gayest in the memory of the oldest society inhabitant.

Announcement was made yesterday of two more notable dances in the near future. Mrs. William Bayard Cutting (Miss Olivia Murray) of 24 East Seventy-second Street will give the first of these on Friday evening, Dec. 21, for her daughter, Miss Olivia Cutting. Mrs. Charles T. Barney (Miss Lilly Whitney) of 101 East Thirty-eighth Street will give the second of these dances on Friday evening, Dec. 28, for her daughter, Miss Helen T. Barney. Mrs. Barney's guests will be about a hundred in number, as it is not to be a very large affair.

Other dances of the immediate future will be those to be given by Mrs. Louis Philip Henop (Miss Alice Seeley) at Sherry's on Monday evening, Dec. 17, for her second daughter, Miss Sydney Seeley Henop; by Mrs. Woodbury G. The death of Sir John Luke George Hely-Hutchinson, fifth Earl of Donoughmore, which occurred in London yesterday from paralysis, removes an interesting and well-known personality from the London club and society worlds. Lord Donoughmore was also well known here and spent the Summer of 1899 at Narragansett Pier, Newport, and Boston. He was an intimate friend and business associate of Reginald Ward, Samuel Newhouse, A. A. Blow, and the other American Copper Kings, as they are called in London. He was much interested in Mexican mines, and at his death was the Chairman of the committee of shareholders of the Avino mines in Mexico. Possessed of rare cultivation, aristocratic and genial manners, a kindly disposition, and known as one of the best of raconteurs, he was universally popular. His daughters, Lady Evelyn and Lady Nora Hely-Hutchinson, are two of the most beautiful young women in London society and made their début a few years since. His eldest child and only son, Richard Walter John Hely-Hutchinson, Viscount Suirdais, who now becomes the sixth Earl of Donoughmore, was born in 1875 and has been for the three years past Secretary to the Governor of Hongkong. Lord Donoughmore succeeded his father, the fourth Earl, in 1866. The earldom was created in 1800. He married at Hobart Town, Tasmania, in 1874, Miss Frances Isabella Stephens, daughter of Col. Stephens. Lady Donoughmore is one of the most popular and best known women in London society. Many cables of condolence were sent from Boston and this city to Lord Donoughmore's family yesterday.

TURF FRAUDS REVIEWED

Trotting Horsemen's Misdeeds Passed on by National Board.

EXPULSIONS FOR "RINGERS"

Racing Tricksters Exposed by French Government—Session Will Last Until Friday.

The court of appeals for the trotting turf, held by the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association in the Murray Hill Hotel yesterday, was crowded with petitioners, witnesses, and counsel from the time the second day's session began, at 10 A. M., until the adjournment, at 6 P. M. P. P. Johnson, President of the board, again was in the chair, with George W. Archer, W. H. Gocher, V. C. Blake, William Palmer Allen, C. D. Palmer, John H. Shults, and David Bonner, the other members, present. The business of the reviewing body was hurried as much as possible with fairness to the cases to be heard, but early in the day the members reached the conclusion that they could not finish before Friday afternoon.

Temporary reinstatements of men under suspension were renewed in the cases of E. M. Gillies of Medford, Mass., suspended in 1898; W. J. Thubrun of Allegheny, Penn., suspended in 1898; A. B. Gloddey of Lowell, Mass., and James Healey of Millford Mills, Penn.

The application of E. S. Crane of Watkins, N. Y., for the removal of an order of expulsion issued in December, 1897, was denied, and the board also declined to renew his temporary reinstatement.

The hearing reached its most interesting stage when the cases of men under the ban for "ringing" came up. There was a the usual number of these, and many queer excuses and explanations were offered by the men who had been adjudged guilty of violating racing law in that matter. The board was not inclined to be lenient, however. Some interesting cases were those of Charles Haas of Johnsburg, Ill.; John S. Henderson of Crystal Lake, Ill., and H. L. Throop of Nunda, Ill., in connection with the bay mare Kate Fulmont, 2:12¼, known variously under the management of turf tricksters as Nellie and Nellie M. It was brought out that the mare in question was bought by Thubrun, who transferred her to Henderson, after which she was sent to and raced in Canada. Agents of the National Trotting Association were trailing the mare when from France came information and a photograph of a letter which had been taken from the mails. In this letter one Edward Metcalfe urged George Evans, then training horses in Paris, to sell the mare under a name other than her own to Nigon, the French patron of harness racing, and fixing the price at $2,500. The sale was never made, for the French Government promptly took action to bar Nellie from that country. The association secured other evidence against the managers of the mare, and this was presented yesterday, with the result that Haas, Henderson, and Throop and the mare were ruled off.

S. E. Allen, alias S. Wilson, and J. H. Meehre, alias J. H. Brown, both of Milwaukee, were ordered expelled with the trotter Perhaps, 2:13¾, alias Walter K., on evidence that they had raced the horse fraudulently in Santa Rosa, Cal. The evidence in this case showed that the managers of Perhaps started him as Walter K. on July 3, the horse getting a mark of 2:08. Unfortunately, the real Walter K. won a race the very next day in Michigan, and by becoming so conspicuous caused investigation, which resulted in the exposure of the ringer. The horse is now in Kansas City. The application of Frank E. Spofford of Franklin, Mass., who drove the mare Emma T. under another name, for a removal of an order of expulsion was denied.

Another form of turf fraud was discussed in the case of Frank Shank of Leitchfield, Ohio; George S. Stetenfeld, Frank Penney, and Martin Mullen, all of Cleveland, Ohio, and Richard Meyer of Canal, Ohio, all implicated in a race in Cleveland, Ohio, in which Fanny Dillard was proved to have been "pulled." The mare, after winning the first heat, was beaten in the second and distanced in the third. Shank, the driver, was ruled off at the time, and the board yesterday, on evidence that Penney had paid Shank $600 after the race, presumably for losing the race, Penney, too, was expelled. The charges against the other men were dismissed.

C. E. Jackson of Paterson, N. J., explained a charge of having raced a horse out of his class at Geneva, N. Y., by stating that special conditions had been made for him, and not only did not mend his own case, but caused the board to order a case brought against the Geneva Driving Club for violating the rules. In the meantime Lang was ordered to return the money his horse, Quick, won, this to be redistributed among the horses entitled to it.

Witnesses and counsel filled the room when the cases of James Golden of Medford, Mass., and John Cheney, both drivers, who were fined and suspended on a charge of not trying to win at the Reedville (Mass.) meeting, came up. Golden and Cheney in question were declared off by the judges, and later the punishment of Golden and Cheney was ordered. Golden protested that he wished vindication, but Cheney made no secret of the fact that he wanted to get back the money he was fined. Golden produced many witnesses to his good character, and the testimony showed that he so signalled to the ruling of the judges that he sold out his horses and announced his intention of retiring from racing. The cases were not finished, and will be taken up again to-day.

John Drew, sixty-seven years old, a wealthy and prominent horseman of Paterson, N. J., died in the hotel early yesterday morning. He came to New York to attend the meeting of the Board of Review, in the capacity of a witness in one of the cases on hearing, and was taken suddenly and violently ill in the meeting room Tuesday afternoon and died a few hours later. The body was sent to his home in Paterson.

Harness Races on Snow Track.

A novel form of harness racing is planned by the New Jersey trotting turfman, "Barney" Demarest, to be held on the half-mile track at Morristown, N. J., as soon as the weather comes to his aid. Demarest's intention is to take advantage of the first snow that falls in sufficient quantity and convert his mile course into a race track for sleighs, the racing to be continued as long as the snow and ice needed for that form of sport remain good. A programme of purses will be offered, and aside from the regular events there will be every chance for matches and impromptu contests. The idea was borrowed from the Canadian custom of holding trotting races on the ice, but Demarest expects to improve on the original, at least so far as the comfort of the participants and the spectacular effects are concerned. He will try to preserve the snow as long as possible, and by sprinkling the surface with water whenever there is a freezing temperature, expects to have good sleighing long after the roads and streets are bare of snow. Blacksmiths will be on hand to keep sharp the shoes of horses intended to race.

GREAT HORSE SALE ENDED.

The most successful sale of light harness horses ever held in New York, and, in point of attendance and the quality of the animals offered, one of the most remarkable ever held anywhere, closed yesterday in Madison Square Garden, where the Fasig-Tipton Company's "Old Glory" auction reached its end, after nine days of selling. The attendance again was surprisingly large, and men prominent on the trotting turf were as numerous as they were on the opening day, the buyers from distant points congregating in the big ring for final farewells before dispersing to all parts of the country. The bidding was fast and the prices were up to the average for the last few days of the sale, though no larger figures were reached. The catalogue was completed late in the afternoon, when the last horse present of the 786 numbered passed under the hammer, the record of the two weeks' sale showing that 702 animals had been disposed of for a total of $352,180, an average of $501.68, the best ever attained at the great annual auction. The record for 1899, the previous best, was $332,280, for 780 head, an average of $426, while the year before, when the number of horses sold was about the same, the average was $376. Yesterday's sales realized a total of $8,615 for 38 head, the average being $226.71.

The shipping of horses from the sale has been going on ever since the first day, but the more important shipments of notable horses, bought to go to Europe, still are to be made. A few animals purchased by B. Tappaen and Ruzick & Morgenstein went earlier, but the greater part of the stock bought by these and other agents of European firms interested in American trotters will be shipped Saturday on the transport Patricia. On that ship will go the champion three-year-old filly Contralto, 2:10, bought for $6,500; Neeretta, 2:09¾, bought for $3,200, and Greenbrino, 2:10¾, under the care of a representative of Ruzick & Morganstein, with about seventeen horses owned by the same firm, the horses bought by Ira Iverson, with the American driver in charge, and consignments sent by Henry Fleischman and Louis Hockscher, all to be landed in Hamburg. Most of the horses are intended to race at Vienna, Austria.

Barney Demarest of Morristown, N. J., sold at private sale the pole pair, Prince and Genoa, bay trotters, record 2:19 on a half-mile track, for $1,000, to H. Graham Rambo of Coatsville, Penn. AMATEURS AT BILLIARDS

Tobias and Servatius Won in A. A. U. Tournament Yesterday.

GAMES LONG DRAWN OUT

By His Defeat Yesterday Isaac A. Mannes Is Forced Out of the Competition at K. A. C.

Florian Tobias and L. A. Servatius were the winners of the two games played yesterday in the National Class B billiard tournament now in progress at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, under the sanction of the Amateur Athletic Union. Both games were long and trying to the patience of spectators. The best average of the day, that of Mr. Tobias, was only 4 2-7 points to the inning.

Mr. Tobias defeated Isaac A. Mannes by a score of 300 to 263 in the afternoon game. This defeat puts Mr. Mannes out of the tournament, as he also lost his first match played Monday night. Mr. Tobias won by his usual habit of playing safe, a style of game which made the match long and tiresome to the spectators, and so lowered the average of both contestants as to preclude their entrance into the final round uopn a basis of their grand averages in the present qualifying series.

At the twentieth inning a run of 19 points by Mr. Mannes immediately followed by Mr. Tobias with a run of 21 points left the score 104 to 94 in the former's favor.

Mr. Mannes held his lead by a margin varying, but never larger, up to the sixty-eighth inning. This was within two innings of the close of the game. Mr. Tobias's constant tendency to play safe gave his opponent a hard row to hoe, but on the other hand his own inability or disinclination to play a dead ball kept his own scoring far below what it might have been. It was a case of spoiling his own game in the endeavor to make that of Mr. Manne's as difficult as possible, and it was only by abandoning his smashing style and piling up long runs through closer play in the last three innings that he finally won the game.

The scores in detail follow, the play being at fourteen-inch balk line, with the anchor nurse allowed:

Tobias—0 1 2 0 2 8 0 2 1 5 1 0 3 4 3 2 3 1 3 4 7 0 2 2 0 4 2 0 1 2 0 0 2 0 4 8 3 6 0 0 1 1 0 2 3 6 6 1 1 3 5 1 1 2 5 0 0 2 1 7 1 2 0 3 4 7 4 2 5 1 7. Total, 300; average, 4 20-70; high runs, 21, 24, 25, and 25.

Mannes—0 0 0 2 1 1 4 0 0 0 5 1 2 0 1 2 0 3 4 3 2 1 0 9 1 1 0 4 8 2 0 1 9 0 1 1 0 4 1 7 2 8 7 1 3 8 1 6 1 0 0 0 5 3 9 7 5 0 0 0 0 3 1 4 0 1 7 0 3 5 1 0 0 6 8. Total; 263; average, 3 53-70; high run, 21.

The evening game brought together William Paige of Boston and L. A. Servatius of this city. Mr. Servatius won with comparative ease, somewhat to the surprise of the spectators, who had anticipated a brilliant game from Mr. Paige. As it was the match was even slower than that of the afternoon. Mr. Servatius played a steady game, but one entirely lacking in brilliance. Mr. Paige's play was decidedly erratic.

Mr. Servatius opened the play, and a run of 15 points in the third inning gave him a lead that he maintained throughout the game. Singularly enough, the best runs of both contestants were made in the sixty-fourth inning. Mr. Servatius counted 19 points in that inning, and Mr. Paige replied with a run of 18, which he secured by carefully nursing the balls up the middle of the table. Throughout the game Mr. Servatius excelled in execution, but he often handicapped himself by poor judgment in choosing his shots. Mr. Paige played several very pretty draw shots, but spoiled his score by seeming carelessness. Albro Akin refereed the game. The scores:

Servatius—1 5 15 0 0 4 6 5 8 6 2 9 9 5 0 15 12 4 8 5 0 1 2 5 0 0 2 0 6 1 2 7 7 1 1 1 1 5 4 4 0 0 2 7 2 1 7 0 6 0 13 1 4 0 2 7 1 3 7 2 2 1 10 0 0 3 5 1 0 1 5 0 9 1. Total, 300; average, 3 72-76; high run, 19.

Paige—1 4 1 5 4 4 4 1 1 1 0 1 0 18 16 1 7 0 0 1 2 0 0 3 2 0 3 7 1 4 1 1 2 0 2 8 3 3 2 2 0 0 1 1 3 4 8 0 3 0 0 8 0 14 0 6 0 4 4 3 0 1 3 18 0 0 3 14 1 1 8 0 5 2 2. Total, 253; average, 3 28-75; high run, 18.

Two more games of the qualifying round will be played to-day. Edwin O. Presby and Samuel G. Estabrook, both of this city, will meet this afternoon. Charles G. Schmitt of Chicago and Florian Tobias will play to-night.

EASTERN BASEBALL LEAGUE.

Providence Awarded Championship and New Officers Were Elected.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 5.—The annual meeting of the Eastern Baseball League at the Narragansett Hotel to-day brought together quite a number of baseball men.

The Directors of the league met shortly before noon, with T. B. Cory, Providence; J. H. Callahan, Rochester; P. H. Hurley, Worcester; E. G. Barrows, Toronto, and President Powers present.

The championship of 1901 was formally awarded to the Providence Club.

The report of the Board of Directors on the affairs of the past season was adopted, no definite action being taken on the claims entered by Montreal of minor character against Toronto, Rochester, and Syracuse, as Montreal representatives were not present.

The transfer of the Toronto franchise to the new organization with E. J. Mack as President and E. C. Barrow as Manager was sanctioned.

The constitution was amended providing that the annual meeting of the Eastern League shall be held in New York on the first Wednesday in December instead of the home city of the club winning the championship, a return to the old plan.

In relation to the much-talked-of agreement among the players regarding a new form of contract between players and clubs, it was voted that the matter be left in the hands of the President and Directors of the league, the players demand limitations to reservation rights to three years with one club and no assignment or transfer of services of a player from one club to another without the consent of the player.

The league re-elected P. T. Powers for the eighth time as President, Secretary, and Treasurer. The Board of Directors was elected, to consist of two from each section, P. H. Hurley of Worcester, Charles Soby of Hartford, Edward J. Mack of Toronto, and E. F. Higgins of Rochester.

The league adjourned to meet in New York for the schedule meeting at a date to be fixed by the President.

American Baseball League Plans.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 5.—President "Ban" Johnson and Charles Sommers of the American Baseball League Circuit Committee were in conference to-day perfecting plans to obtain grounds in Washington and Baltimore, upon which they hold options.

President Johnson says that the American League will not sign the present agreement with the National League for next season, and that if one which is satisfactory is not presented by the National League, the American League will offer one guaranteeing protection to the National.

Harvard's Athletic Finances.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 5.—The financial report of S. L. Fuller, '98, graduate manager of Harvard athletics, shows that the season 1899-1900 was very successful. This was the first year of the consolidated management, under which every branch of Harvard athletics has had its finances put in charge of the graduate manager. For the first time the freshman teams were able to get through without a deficit, while the crew cut down the customary deficit of $5,000 to $223.97. The baseball team made a handsome profit last year.

For permanent improvements on Soldiers' Field $46,265 was set aside, $39,000 of which came from the football team's profits of $42,268.58. Of this latter amount $25,004 was the net receipts of the Yale game in Cambridge.

BUILDING ON AN OLD CEMETERY.

Modern Apartment Houses on the Site of a Jewish Burial Ground.

The four lots on the south side of Eighty-eighth Street, between Park and Madison Avenues, formerly a Jewish cemetery, have been bought by a firm of builders and will soon be covered with modern apartment houses. These lots were bought by the Congregations Rodoph Sholom and Chaarl Zadek, when Eighty-eighth Street was a rural district. In 1858 the neighborhood had been so much built up the city authorities decided that the burying ground must go, although not without objection on the part of the two congregations, owing to ideas prevailing among those of the Jewish faith as to the sanctity of the resting places of their dead.

The Congregation Chaarl Zadek sold its part of the property in June, 1899, to Mrs. Mary Ehrmann, by whom together with the Congregation Rodoph Sholom the entire plot will soon be turned over to the builders.

Eleventh Corps Association Dinner.

The annual dinner of the Eleventh Army Corps Association will take place at the Fifth Avenue Hotel on the evening of Dec. 12. Gen. Franz Sigel, Gen. di Cesnola, Gen. Egbert L. Viélé, and Gen. Horatio C. King will be among the speakers.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT.—The leading influence in wheat yesterday was a strong and unexpected advance in Paris markets, based on a reported favorable action by the French Senate toward the new bill providing for a change in export and import affairs. The idea of the bill is to aid the French farmer by stimulating the export of wheat. Other European markets followed the Paris advance sharply. Stimulated by this bullish array of foreign news, the local wheat market advanced half a cent at the opening and followed it up with further improvement later in the day, although this in turn yielded during the last hour to considerable realizing by local traders, under which part of the upturn was lost, closing prices showing ¼@⅝c net advance. J. P. MORGAN & CO.

OFFICE OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

St. Paul, October 31st, 1900.

Messrs. J. P. MORGAN & CO., New York:

Dear Sirs: Referring to the Northern Pacific Railway Company's St. Paul-Duluth Division Mortgage, dated June 15, 1900, given to secure an issue limited to $20,000,000 of 4 per cent. gold bonds, I beg to state as follows:

The railroads covered by the mortgage comprise what was formerly the St. Paul & Duluth Railroad and branches, together with leases of the Minneapolis & Duluth and Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroads, extending between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth, comprising about 238.09 miles of productive railroad, besides the valuable terminals at the head of Lake Superior.

Title to the entire property has been acquired directly by the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and the St. Paul-Duluth Division bonds are secured by a purchase-money mortgage upon the property above mentioned, subject only to existing bonds and car-trust obligations aggregating $5,283,000 par value, to retire which a corresponding amount of the new bonds is reserved. The Bonds are DIRECT OBLIGATIONS OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY and secured by a first lien upon the mortgaged premises, subject only to the existing bonds and car-trust obligations above mentioned.

The total amount of bonds authorized to be issued is	$20,000,000.00
Out of which there has been issued in payment for St. Paul and Duluth Railroad property, rights, and franchises, including the liquidation of all unfunded obligations, and including funds placed in trust for the retirement of the outstanding preferred and common stocks and scrip	9,215,000.00
Balance	$10,785,000.00
Which has been reserved for the following purposes, viz.:
For retirement at maturity of the outstanding obligation of the St. Paul and Duluth Railroad and its proprietary lines	$5,283,000.00
For improvements to existing property	502,000.00
For extensions and additional branches, terminal properties, and to double-track existing lines	5,000,000.00
	$10,785,000.00

The lands included in the Land Grant of the St. Paul & Duluth Railroad Company, estimated to be worth about $4,000,000, and which were not covered by the old mortgages of that Company, are to be sold and the proceeds applied to the purchase of the new St. Paul-Duluth Division bonds at not exceeding 105 per cent. and accrued interest; or, if bonds cannot be purchased at that price, then to betterments, improvements, or additions to the mortgaged premises or the purchase of equipment for use thereon.

It is hardly necessary to refer to the large surplus of earnings of the Northern Pacific Railway Company over all fixed charges, which will be applicable to the payment of interest on these bonds, but for convenience of reference the following statement of the earnings and expenses of the Company for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, is appended:

Gross earnings were	$30,021,817.72
Operating expenses were	14,394,628.31
	$15,620,689.41
Less taxes	850,590.09
Leaving	$14,770,099.32
Add dividends, interest on securities owned, and interest on deposit	685,521.30
	$15,461,620.62
Deduct—
Interest on bonds	$5,864,950.00
Rental of leased lines	112,851.86
	5,977,801.86
Surplus over all fixed charges	$9,483,818.70

No charges have been made to Capital Account other than for additional equipment, the construction of branch lines and purchases of real estate, all expenditures for improvements having been made out of the year's income.

The foregoing statement does not include the operations of the St. Paul and Duluth Railroad.

By the acquisition of this property the Northern Pacific Railway Company's system has been strengthened by the addition of 238.09 miles of productive railroad, the Company becomes sole owner of valuable terminals at the head of Lake Superior, in which before it had only a joint interest, and is relieved of the risk of having in these terminals a partner whose interest, should it become adverse or competitive, could incalculably damage its business.

The absorption of this property has resulted in large economies, and justifies the belief that the purchase will prove of great value to the system.

A contract has been made with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company for the use of the St. Paul & Duluth line between St. Paul and the head of Lake Superior, for ninety-nine years from October 1, 1900, which gives the business of that Company to said line exclusively.

Overtures have been received from other companies, looking to a similar use of the line.

Yours truly,
C. S. MELLEN, President.

BANK CONSOLIDATION TALK.

Bank of New York and the Western National Will Unite, a Leading Financier Says.

A positive statement on the consolidation of the Bank of New York, National Banking Association, with the Western National Bank was made yesterday by a banking official who has opportunities possessed by few of obtaining information in regard to banking affairs in the Wall Street district. "No successor will be elected to President Ebenezer S. Mason, who died recently," he said. "The Bank of New York and the Western National Bank will become at Pine and Nassau Streets, the site of the old Clearing House, on which the Western National Bank building was erected, the 'Bank of New York No. 1, founded 1784 by Alexander Hamilton.' This bank will be the financial institution of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States and will bear the same relation to it as the National Bank of Commerce bears to the Mutual Life Insurance Company."

"I have nothing to say on that subject," said Valentine P. Snyder, President of the Western National Bank, who is one of the new Directors of the Equitable.

James W. Alexander, President of the Equitable and a Director of the Western National, would not discuss the matter. "So far as I know," he said, "there's nothing in it, nothing definite in regard to it, anyway."

Charles Olney, cashier of the Bank of New York, said that he knew nothing about the stories of consolidation which have been current since President Mason's death and the circular issued by Charles D. Leverich, a Director of the Bank of New York, who offered for a syndicate of its stockholders who aim at getting a majority control $300 a share for one-half of each stockholder's holdings.

The mutual interests of the Equitable and the Western National are found in their Directorates. Brayton Ives, President Alexander, David H. Moffatt, John E. Searles, Marcellus Hartley, C. Ledyard Blair, and James H. Hyde are Directors of both corporations. Only D. Ogden Mills of the Bank of New York board is a Director of the Equitable. The capital of the Western National Bank is $2,100,000, and that of the Bank of New York $2,000,000, their surplus and undivided profits being, respectively, $1,687,404.56 and $2,074,063.94. The resources of the Western National are $53,944,163.86, and those of the Bank of New York $25,216,288.29. The assets of the Equitable were Dec. 30 last more than $280,000,000, and its surplus exceeded $61,000,000.

MARKET MOVEMENT.

The tone of the stock market yesterday was distinctly strong, much better, in fact, than on any day in the last two weeks. The close on Tuesday had been heavy, if not actually weak. Declines in Americans on the London Exchange were noted, the quotations sent over here at the opening being from one-eighth to one-half of 1 per cent. down. In spite of this and notwithstanding continued professional selling, the market opened steady, and, after a period of quiet, became strong and active, with the close showing actual buoyancy.

The Atchison Directors met during the day and declared the regular semi-annual dividend of 2½ per cent. on the preferred stock; while published earnings of a number of railway systems, including Southern, Chesapeake and Ohio, and Missouri Pacific, were exceptionally favorable.

The demand for stocks in the loan crowd shows that the short account is extended, and, in some quarters, unwieldy.

AMALGAMATED COPPER was the weakest active stock on the list, at one time declining nearly 4 points, but rallying sharply toward the close on short covering and an apparent scarcity of floating stock. The selling orders came from the same firm that has sold the stock down from the first day it was traded in on the Exchange.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY shares were bought by Morgan interests, while not a little outside buying was stimulated by the earnings of the company for the fourth week of November, which totaled $878,110, an increase of $69,480.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO was steadily absorbed for Philadelphia account, and the talk persists that the Pennsylvania Railroad is concerned in the buying. This cannot be confirmed. For the fourth week of November the earnings of the road amounted to $367,950, a gain of $50,800.

BURLINGTON was advanced under buying for Boston houses. A private dispatch received from that city yesterday was to the effect that the bond refunding plan of the company will shortly be announced.

ERIE and WABASH stocks were a feature of the market, being much more active than for many weeks, and making substantial advances.

PEORIA AND EASTERN stock and bonds, in which ordinarily there is little or no trading, were active yesterday, the bonds being as heavily traded in as any in the bond market. The buying was credited to insiders.

LOUISVILLE AND NASHVILLE was inclined to heaviness following the reported decrease of $52,300 in the earnings for the fourth week of November.

LOCAL RAILWAY shares, Metropolitan excepted, were among the leaders in the afternoon's advance, and it was reported that new pools had been formed in Brooklyn Rapid Transit and Manhattan.

Chicago was a seller of Linseed Oil stocks, while there was liquidation of Ice Trust common stock by a house which was an active buyer on the advance some weeks ago.

There was comparatively little trading in Pacific Mail, notwithstanding the action at Washington in respect to the Ship Subsidy bill. Southern Pacific, however, was bought in the belief that if the bill became a law the Southern Pacific, controlling Pacific Mail, could not fail to benefit. Interests identified with the property were credited with much of the buying around 41.

The decline of nearly three points in Jersey Central followed the statement by President Maxwell that the story of an alliance between Reading and Jersey Central was ridiculous. For the time being the talk of Baltimore and Ohio control is little heard.

London sold, all told, about 60,000 shares in this market, principally of Erie, Wabash, and Chesapeake and Ohio. There was some buying of the Atchison shares.

It is stated by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. that the advance subscriptions for the Third Avenue 4 per cent. bonds, which will be offered for public subscription to-morrow, are very large, and that the complete success of the issue is assured.

Many of the banks and a number of other lenders of money marked up their outstanding loans yesterday from 4 to 4½ per cent., but some of the trust companies were lending during the day at 4 per cent. Most of the day's loans were made at with a few at 5.

ATCHISON'S DIVIDEND.

The Directors of Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé met yesterday and declared the regular semi-annual dividend of 2½ per cent. on the preferred stock, taking no action on the common. Reports submitted at the meeting showed that the business and earnings of the company were large.

In some ill-informed quarters of the Street the prediction had been made that a dividend on the common stock would be declared, but the report never received official sanction. On the contrary, it was felt that surplus earnings should be conserved, and the action of yesterday was generally commended by conservative interests.

Discussing the condition of Atchison, Chairman Addace F. Walker of the Board of Directors, says: "The figures speak for themselves and show exactly what we are doing. For October our gross earnings amounted to $5,070,447, and our net to $2,241,454, an increase in the first case of $580,503 and in the second of $282,604. That tells the story, for all the indications are that the earnings will continue fully as good, if not better. We are earning the full dividend on the preferred, and at the rate of 5 per cent. on the common."

A Chicago dispatch, published in the Street yesterday, said: "The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad is handling a large tonnage of merchandise, which is being distributed throughout the West, and lumber and coal are going with it. The return movement consists of live stock and a fair amount of grain traffic. Freight rates are in good condition, and passenger travel is heavy. A Director of the company is quoted as saying that there is a shortage of 800 cars a day, due to the failure to promptly return empty cars from the Eastern connections."

IRON AND STEEL SITUATION.

According to The Iron Age, the steel and iron markets generally have quieted down a good deal, and are settling down to a humdrum pace, which it is expected will be maintained for some time to come. The future only can tell to what extent and how far ahead buyers have covered their requirements and have replenished stocks. It is understood that in some lines manufacturers have been carrying a considerable stock, and they naturally have been purchasing only as this was depleted. Generally speaking, all anxiety as to Winter work is entirely dispelled, and while capacity is expanding, it is only gradually swinging into line. The whole situation is therefore regarded as sound, although it must be confessed the announcement of a cut in wages of 10 per cent. by a large steel company has come in the nature of a shock.

On the general situation The Iron Age says:

Reports from Pittsburg indicate that some large contracts for next year for Connellsville coke have been placed, the price named being $2 per ton at oven. Intimations are thrown out that the price for lake ores will not be quite as low as is generally hoped for. Nothing definite relative to this phase of the question of costs for next year is really expected until we are well into January.

The volume of sales of pig iron has been moderate as compared with recent weeks. It is believed, however, that a considerable tonnage must still be placed, even by large interests. The Chicago market for foundry irons, in which there has been a keen rivalry between local and outside producers, is now in much better shape. Sales to Europe have been rather light lately, although occasionally good inquiries reach this side. The current shipments are still heavy, but that is water which has passed by the mill.

Very little is being done in steel billets or sheet bars. Prices in England have receded. Thus, £5 4s. 6d., at which tin plate bars were offered from this side, delivered in Wales, was turned down on the ground that local steel works were offering at less.

The plate makers are reported to have put the finishing touches on their organization. The tonnage offering is still quite heavy, the advance in prices not having apparently checked business. There is some talk of a further lifting of prices.

Chicago reports the closing of a contract by the leading bridge interest of 8,000 tons of material for the joint track elevation of the Atchison, Toneka and Santa Fé, the Alton and the Chicago, Madison and Northern Railroads. In the same city 5,000 tons of bridge work for the drainage canal is being bid on. Further west 600 tons have been taken for the Toneka shops of the Atchison road. In Buffalo the leading interest has taken 4,000 tons for an elevator, and in Pittsburg 1,000 tons for the Oliver interest. We note also eight bridges for the Southern Railroad, calling for about 1,200 tons.

The bar makers are bringing idle mill after idle mill into line, and must now be developing their capacity quite fully. While in the sheet trade the leading interest has considerably advanced its price, the outside mills have not yet gone to quite the same length.

In the skelp trade business continues quite active, and occasional good sales are reported.

On the Stock Exchange yesterday steel and iron stocks were generally much stronger, Federal Steel advancing 1½, Steel and Wire, 1¾; Colorado Fuel, 1⅛, and Tennessee Coal, ½. The report that the November earnings of Tennessee Coal and Iron were most satisfactory led to the advance in that security. Flower brokers bought Federal Steel. Colorado Fuel was advanced on dividend expectations.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Linseed preferred was moderately active to-day, but the opening price of 41¾ attracted considerable selling, with the result that the market weakened to 38, and closed at 39. The common continues quiet, at 7⅝@8. There was some demand for Milwaukee Brewing preferred, at 16@17, and the common at 4. Biscuit common opened at 36¾, sold to 37¾, and closed there. Strawboard was picked up quietly around 32. Thirty shares of Chicago Telephone stock changed hands at the opening of the market at 275. This is a sharp advance as compared with recent quotations. It is said that some outside trades have been made in the stock recently around 240. The story in connection with Chicago Telephone is that a movement has been started and is well under way with a view to consolidating all the Bell Telephone companies in the country into one large corporation.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 5.—As a whole it was a dull day in the stock market, but prices held well as a rule. Butte, which, though subjected to considerable pressure during the day, did not get below 83, broke just at the close to 80¾. The other coppers also were inclined to sag. Baltic was off to 27 and Parrot to 47½; Montana, after selling up to 329, softened to 325; Isle Royale fell to 35, Old Dominion to 28, and Centennial to 16. Some of these low figures were bettered a trifle just at the end. In the general list little business was doing. Gas and Coke was off to 12½, finishing at 13; Dominion Coal sold as low as 38, and Erie Telephone was back to 106. The closing came quiet and irregular.

Money loaned at the Clearing House at 2½ and 3 per cent. and New York funds, again in good demand, sold at from 10c discount to par.

Call money is firmer. There are outstanding loans at 3 per cent., but new money is mostly 4 per cent. Rates on collateral loans vary according to the collateral and the lenders. When the collateral is mixed, quotations range from 4½ to 5 per cent. on four to six months.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 5.—The Philadelphia market dragged along to-day in the same perfunctory manner which had characterized it throughout the week. Trading, aside from Electric Company of America, Alkali common, and Cambria Steel, was quiet, though the tone showed an improvement over yesterday. Investment interest was observable in a new high record for Choctaw 5s and Choctaw and Memphis 5s. The Choctaw shares also were in good demand at steady prices. On relatively small offerings Electric Company of America declined ⅝, to 8½, despite the reported utterances of two members of the Directorate that earnings have been sufficient to pay the regular dividend.

The heaviest trading of the day was in Alkali common, one block of 5,000 shares at 82 being sold near the close. Frequent transactions of 500 to 1,000 shares were recorded early in the day at from 2¼ to 2⅜. Fractional advances were effected in Cambria Steel and Marsden, and bids above the market in both instances failed to dislodge stock. Among the specialties Philadelphia Electric was steady at yesterday's figure, and Union Traction showed evidence of a better support.

BROKER HALK'S DENIAL.

Asserts that All His Memoranda of Sales Were Stamped.

There were no new arrests in Wall Street yesterday by the internal revenue officers of brokers charged with violating the law by failing to stamp memoranda of sales. Col. F. G. Thompson of the Internal Revenue Department insists, however, that when the proper time comes, other arrests will be made.

Joseph Halk, who was arrested on Tuesday, said yesterday, discussing his arrest:

"Pending the hearing on Dec. 14, I think the wisest thing is for me to say nothing. I see said, however, that the evidence against me was obtained through the books of A. C. Hooper & Co., who recently failed. All I can say is that I am not responsible for the bookkeeping of that firm, and, as the affairs of the concern show, their system was anything but perfect. I can say, however, that all the necessary memoranda were made and stamped."

President Wagar of the Consolidated Exchange says that, so far as he knows, there are no new developments, and that he has had no official notice of any irregularities.

Internal Revenue deputies were understood to be investigating several suspected cases yesterday.

THE SAALE NOT SOLD.

Upset Price of $100,000 Prevents Would-Be Buyers from Bidding.

The North German Lloyd steamship Saale, one of the vessels of that company's fleet caught in the Hoboken fire, was offered for sale at auction yesterday afternoon. Quite a number of prospective bidders were on hand when she was put for sale by Burdett & Dennis, at Burling Slip, at 1 P. M.

"I ought to tell you," said Auctioneer Dennis, greatly to the surprise of intending bidders, "that the owners have put an upset price of $100,000 on the ship, and if that price is not bid, I'll withdraw the vessel."

This settled the sale, not, an offer was made, and in three minutes' time the sale was called off.

"You ought to pay our way back to Boston; we'd never have come had we known this," remarked a disgusted Bostonian, who, with a number of other bidders from that city, had intended bidding the vessel in. Others from a distance talked in a similar strain, as they expected that the vessel could be secured for a sum a great deal less than the upset price required. One man is said to have asked that the auctioneer restore to him 25 cents, the amount it cost him to come to the auction.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading in the market for outside securities yesterday was light, except in three or four stocks, which received special attention. Prices were firmer than on Tuesday, and some of the losses of that day were partially recovered. Among the stocks that were weakest were the copper shares, which, under the influence of the decline in Amalgamated Copper, sold off fractionally.

AMERICAN WOOLEN, one of the most active of the industrials, continued to show relative firmness, and was traded in throughout the day between 23 and 22½. It is authoritatively stated that the listing of the American Woolen on the Boston Stock Exchange will shortly be followed by an application to have the stock placed in the unlisted department of the New York Stock Exchange.

CONSOLIDATED EQUIPMENT, although under pressure at the opening, developed considerable strength and closed strong at a slight advance over the previous day's final bid. The total transactions did not exceed 2,000 shares, nearly all of which sold at 12.

DISTILLERS OF AMERICA was fairly active at 5¼ and 5½. At the close the common stock showed a small net gain, while the preferred stock, which was dull, was quoted fractionally lower.

RUBBER GOODS was active and strong on the announcement of the regular quarterly dividend of 1 per cent., as also the usual dividend of 1¾ per cent. on the preferred stock. The common advanced to 30 and closed at 29½, a net gain of 1⅝ points.

UNION COPPER, in common with the other copper shares, was weak. Union Copper, on transactions in about 500 shares, sold down to 4⅞ and closed with a net loss of one-quarter of a point, at 4¾ bid. Recent official reports from the company's property are to the effect that the ore bodies are widening.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COPPER sold down to 19¾, but recovered fractionally in the last hour. It closed at 20 bid, showing a net loss of three-eighths of a point. Transactions aggregated about 1,500 shares.

GENERAL CARRIAGE somewhat surprised the traders by a sharp decline, following the opening sale. The brokers who were the principal sellers yesterday had for some days been prominent buyers.

Closing quotations yesterday, compared with those of the previous day, were as follows:

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

West 77th Street Lot Sells for $50,000—Other Dealings—Large 4 Per Cent. Loan—Results at Auction.

L. J. Phillips & Co. have sold for Jacob F. Cullman for $50,000 the lot on the south side of Seventy-seventh Street, Manhattan Square South, 125 feet west of Central Park West, 25 by 100. The buyer will erect on the lot one of the handsomest residences on the west side. On the lot adjoining on the west, Mr. Cullman, who still owns a 75-foot frontage at that point, will erect a dwelling for his own occupancy.

L. J. Phillips & Co. have sold for B. Blumenthal, as President of the Congregation Rodolph Sholom, the plot, 50 by 100, on the south side of Eighty-eighth Street, 148 feet west of Park Avenue; also, for Mary Ehrmann, the plot, 51.1 by 100.8½, adjoining the foregoing on the west. The buyers of both parcels are a firm of builders who will erect apartment houses on the site. This plot was formerly a Jewish cemetery, in which the Congregation Rodolph Sholom and the Congregation Chuari Zadek were jointly interested. The latter sold its part of the property to Mrs. Ehrmann in June, 1899.

Gustavus L. Laurence resold the five-story building at the southeast corner of Washington and Beach Street, 50 by 70, which he bought last week from Andrew Little. The present buyers, the Hill Brothers Company, commission merchants, will occupy the building.

It is reported that Edward S. T. Kennedy has sold the six-story building at the southeast corner of Christopher Street and Waverley Place, 73 by 38.11.

John R. Foley has sold for H. M. Lazinsk to William Weis, for $42,500, the four-story English basement dwelling 41 West Thirty-fifth Street, 18.9 by 98.9, the house covering the entire lot.

Edward J. Welling, Jr., has sold for I. J. Deeshon to M. Nordlinger 316 East One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, 25 by 100.

Among the mortgages recorded yesterday was one by which the Mutual Life Insurance Company has made a five-year loan of $500,000 at 4 per cent. interest to Mary M. and Charles H. Ward. The property mortgaged is 507 and 509 Broadway, running through to 270 and 274 Mercer Street, just south of Washington Place.

Thomas P. Sinnott took title yesterday to the plot, 100 by 102.2, on the north side of Seventy-ninth Street, 200 feet west of West End Avenue, and has secured a building loan of $90,000 on the property.

The Auction Room.

Two valuable Columbus Avenue properties—the apartment house at the southeast corner of Seventy-second Street, and that on the corresponding corner at Seventy-seventh Street—offered at auction yesterday by order of the executors of the estate of B. M. Farley, were very poorly received. The former parcel was bid in at $255,000. For the Seventy-seventh Street corner somebody bid $160,000, but, with a statement that the annual rentals amount to $23,000, Auctioneer Ryan declined to accept this offer and withdrew the property.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 or consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The annual report of Secretary Hitchcock of the Interior Department was made public to-day. It deals with the administration during the year of the following bureaus: Indian Affairs, Public Lands, Pensions, Patents, Census, Geological Survey, Education, and Railroads. It also has to deal with the reports of Governors of Territories and the Commissioner of the Interior for Porto Rico. It is necessarily voluminous. Its bulk is greater than the report of any other department of the Government. Most of the subjects covered are treated extensively in reports which have been issued by the heads of the bureaus embraced in the Interior Department.

There were disposed of during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, public lands aggregating 13,053,887.96 acres, classified as follows: Cash sales, 1,178,982.47 acres; miscellaneous entries, embracing homesteads, timber culture, land warrants, scrip locations, State selections, swamp lands, railroad and wagon road selections, Indian allotments, &c., 12,212,482.40 acres, and Indian lands, 62,423.09 acres, showing an increase for 1,271,474.80 acres, as compared with the aggregate disposals for the preceding fiscal year.

The total cash receipts during the fiscal year from various sources aggregate $4,379,758.10, an increase of $1,360,629.76 over the preceding fiscal year. The total area of the public lands may be stated to be approximately 1,071,881,632 acres, of which 917,125,880 acres are undisposed of and 154,745,782 acres have been reserved for various purposes.

During the year a new cave has been explored by the department, which promises to be a marvelous addition to the natural wonders of the United States. The cave is known as Wild Cave, and is in South Dakota, in the Black Hills region, about twelve miles southeast of the town of Custer. Speaking of it, Secretary Hitchcock says:

An investigation of the cave was accordingly made by two geologists of the Geological Survey, and from their report, which is set forth more fully in the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it appears that the cave is of large dimensions, of great interest and beauty, having many miles of galleries branching and reticulating along the jointed planes of carboniferous limestone, and numerous chambers with stalactitic and stalagmitic formations. Owing to the existence of a number of unperfected entries covering lands around the mouth of the cave, it would not be advisable at this time to have the same set apart as a National park. With a view, however, to future action by Congress in the premises, a temporary withdrawal has been made of the necessary lands.

On June 30, 1899, there were 991,519 pensioners borne upon the rolls. On June 30, 1900, there were 993,529 pensioners, a net increase of 2,010. The annual value of the pension roll as it stood June 30, 1900, was $131,554,544. Up to the close of the fiscal year there had been filed 27,047 invalid claims and 3,934 widows' claims, based upon service in the war with Spain, and of these, 926 invalid claims and 888 widows' claims have been allowed.

The Secretary says that under the operation of the law extending the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to such widows who are without support other than their daily labor, and an annual net income not exceeding $250 a year, the number of pensioners will be increased, and that the annual payment of pensions will be increased from $37,000,000 to $44,000,000.

The amount expended for pensions from 1885 to 1900, inclusive, is $2,612,527,648.91.

The report of the Commissioner of Patents upon the business of the Patent Office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, shows that there were received within that year 39,815 applications for mechanical patents, 2,263 applications for designs, 90 applications for reissues, 1,739 caveats, 2,102 applications for trade marks, 872 applications for labels, and 127 applications for prints. There were 26,540 patents granted, including reissues and designs; 1,990 trade marks, 572 labels, and 93 prints were registered. The number of patents that expired was 19,988. The number of allowed applications which were by operation of law forfeited for non-payment of the final fees was 4,052. The total receipts of the office were $1,558,228.55; the total expenditures were $1,247,827.78, and the surplus of receipts over expenditures, being the amount turned into the Treasury, was $310,400.77.

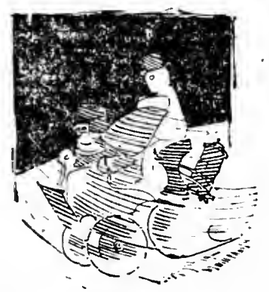
The grand total of pupils in schools in the United States, public and private, for the year ended July 1, 1899, was 16,758,362. The sum of $83,249,049 was expended for sites, buildings, and furniture, and $128,662,880 for teachers' salaries.

Great progress has been made in education in Hawaii. The number of schools in 1899 is reported as 193, of which 46 are private institutions; number of male teachers, 192; female, 252; male pupils, 8,851; female, 6,839. Of the 15,490 pupils, 5,015 were Hawaiian, 2,721 part Hawaiian, 601 American, 213 British, 337 German, 2,882 Portuguese, 81 Scandinavian, 1,141 Japanese, 1,314 Chinese, 30 South Sea Islanders, and 124 other foreigners. Each nationality has its own teacher.

The expenditures for the two years ended Dec. 31, 1899, were $575,353.

Since the year 1888 nearly all the common schools, in which the Hawaiian language was the medium of instruction, have been converted into schools in which English alone is so employed, 98 per cent. of the children being at present instructed by teachers who use English.

In March, 1900, there were 3,069 schools in Cuba with 3,500 teachers, and 130,000 pupils enrolled. In 1899 there were only 200 schools with an attendance of 4,000. There are now 500 schools in Porto Rico, and 28,000 pupils attending them, while there are 200,000 children of school age for whom there are no accommodations. All the schools in Porto Rico are conducted in rented houses, which, in many cases, it is said, are unfit for the purposes.



Though Winter has shown himself the "laggard," we've not been backward in preparing for him—when he comes we're ready with a warm welcome—with all manner of overcoats made from all sorts of goods; but there's nothing we recommend so "warmly" as a good kersey, and the "gooder" it is the more you'll get for your money. (Not advocating the high-priced because we haven't any low-priced.)

Have them at $15 and they'll wear as long as any, but the "goody" ones are $25, $30, $35 and $40—beauties in blue, black and oxford.

Top off with one of our good Derbies or silk hats—correct to the fraction of an inch.

At this season the housekeeper must look specially after the baking powder.

As she cannot make good cake with bad eggs, no more can she make cake that is light, delicious and dainty with inferior baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for the preparation of the finest food. It imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness and flavor noticed in the finest cake, biscuit, doughnuts, crusts, etc., which expert bakers say is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

The "Royal Baker and Pastry Cook"—containing over 800 most practical and valuable cooking receipts—free to every patron. Send postal card with your full address.

There are cheap baking powders, made from alum, but they are exceedingly harmful to health. Their astringent and cauterizing qualities add a dangerous element to food.

GUARDIAN TRUST RECEIVER.

Francis M. Black Appointed to Look After Company's Property Here.

Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court, yesterday, appointed Francis M. Black auxiliary receiver of all the property and records in this State of the Guardian Trust Company. The appointment was made upon an action in equity brought by John W. Gates, W. W. Bierce, W. I. Brown, and eleven other stockholders of the Guardian Trust Company.

The company was first organized in 1889 as the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Trust Company, with a capital of $1,200,000. In 1899 it was reorganized as the Guardian Trust Company and the capital was increased to $2,500,000. Mr. Black was appointed receiver of the company by Judge Thayer of the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri on Nov. 30 last.

Judge Lacombe's order enjoins the company's officers from interfering with the management of the property by the receiver. It also orders that all parties interested show cause on Dec. 14 why the auxiliary receivership should not be continued.

The bill of complaint states that during the ten years the company was operated as the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Trust Company it was controlled by its organizer, A. E. Stillwell, who, by issuing stock to various of his employes and associates, was enabled, by the aid of these "dummies to his will," to "run the affairs of the company to serve his own ends."

According to the complaint, President Stillwell set about organizing various corporations subsidiary to the trust company.

After the reorganization as the Guardian Trust Company, according to the complainant stockholders, the business was not conducted in accordance with the plan under which they had been induced to subscribe to stock. The statement is made that the funds were used to bolster up Stillwell's subsidiary corporations.

According to the complaint, Stillwell and his associates conceived the idea last April of building a railroad from Kansas City to the Gulf of California and developing a portion of Northern Mexico. Some of the stockholders denounced this as unwise, and the suit resulted.

PROF. MONFORT GETS DIVORCE.

Queens County Jury Sustains Charges Against His Wife.

The jury in the suit for divorce brought by Prof. Frank K. Monfort, Principal of the High School at Bayside, in the Queens County Court, in Long Island City, brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff late Tuesday night.

The suit was brought on statutory grounds, two persons, Edward de K. Smith and Charles J. Germeinder, being named. Several letters which were intercepted by the plaintiff were produced in evidence and constituted a principal feature of the case for the husband. Prof. Monfort is about forty-five years old, while his wife is a handsome brunette of twenty-three years. Both Mrs. Monfort and the two co-respondents had been pupils of Prof. Monfort at different times.

DAMAGE SUIT AGAINST SOUSA.

Mr. Reynolds Must File a New Statement of His Claim.

Justice Fitzgerald, in the Supreme Court, yesterday ordered Everett R. Reynolds to file a separate statement of his claim against John Philip Sousa, the bandmaster. Mr. Reynolds claims that in 1898 he made a contract with Mr. Sousa for three years, and he was to have the sole right to make dates for the appearance of the band. He was to receive one-third of the net profits of the venture. He declares that Mr. Sousa took his band abroad as a personal venture, and has since ignored the contract.

Mr. Reynolds claims $4,993.31 for expenses and $10,000 damages as well as an accounting of the profits made on certain concerts given since Mr. Sousa returned from abroad.

End of the Koch Will Contest.

The contest over the estate of the late Henry C. F. Koch, the Harlem merchant, was ended yesterday by the admission of his will to probate, Surrogate Fitzgerald declaring that there was no evidence that undue influence had been used on Mr. Koch to get him to draw up the will. The contestant was Henry G. K. Heath, a son of the testator, who had a large estate left him by his grandmother, Mrs. Heath. In 1887 he had his name changed to Heath. He alleged that his stepmother and two brothers had used undue influence to get his father to leave him out of his will.

CHAMBERLAIN DENOUNCED

Extraordinarily Bitter Attacks on Him in Parliament.

He Begins a Speech in Reply, but His Defense is Cut Off by the Midnight Adjournment.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—The fifteenth Parliament of the reign of Queen Victoria opened yesterday. Before the lights went out in the ancient chambers almost every leading politician had spoken. Such fierce, personal animosity and such bitter invective had scarcely ever before marked proceedings at Westminster.

The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, was the centre of the storm. The policy of the empire regarding South Africa and China, the action of the Government in causing a dissolution when it did so, the conduct of the war against the Boers, and, in fact, all the questions vitally affecting the empire were gravely discussed; but, dominating all, was the Opposition's hatred of the Colonial Secretary. From Lord Rosebery's veiled allusions in the House of Lords, when he assumed what many took to be the practical leadership of the Liberal Party, to the outspoken comment in the House of Commons, criticism of Mr. Chamberlain permeated almost every utterance from the Liberal benches.

For hours this target of satire and abuse sat with his arms clasped around his gaiters, his head on one side, listening intently, unmoved by groans or cheers. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman shook his notes in Mr. Chamberlain's face and declared that a man who published private letters for political purposes (referring to the Clark-Ellis correspondence) should be excluded from the society of all honorable men and ostracized for life had he resorted to such action as a private individual.

The Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury, referring to Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's suave regrets at the departure of Mr. Goschen and Sir Matthew White Ridley from the front bench, said he believed that Sir Henry was so generous that he would even find good in Mr. Chamberlain, should the latter be removed to another sphere. A Liberal shouted "We draw the line somewhere," and both sides of the House roared with laughter.

Once Mr. Chamberlain interrupted and leaped to his feet. A thrill went through the house. "It is not so!" he declared, and proceeded to deny the allegation that he had said that any seat lost to the Government during the recent election was one sold to the Boers.

It was nearly 11 o'clock at night before he rose to reply to the avalanche of attack launched against him. How great a strain he had undergone was evident in the scarcely suppressed excitement of tone on the part of one rarely known to show feeling in the House.

He denied that he had ever accused Mr. Ellis of being a traitor. He denied also that he had deserted any accusations against his own personal integrity. He declared that the special purpose of the meeting of Parliament had been forgotten in an attack upon himself. Irritated beyond control by frequent interruptions and disturbances, he called one of the Liberals, amid the excitement, a "cad."

The Speaker called him to order, and Mr. Chamberlain withdrew the epithet, apologizing for its use. After defending the publication of the Ellis correspondence, he was cut off by the midnight adjournment.

To-day the Opposition will move an amendment to the address, setting forth grounds for an early announcement of the Government's policy.

Among the other leading features of the opening session, in which the Liberal benches were so sparsely filled and the Government's side so packed that there was no room for a vast majority, was Mr. Balfour's announcement that no member of the Cabinet had ever said that he had even dreamed the Boer republics would remain permanently under the Crown colony form of government.

"That restricted phase of liberty," declared Mr. Balfour, "will only be necessary as a temporary expedient."

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

The sensational proceedings in the House of Commons described in the foregoing were part of the debate on the address in reply to the Queen's speech. The speech was read in the House of Lords with the usual ceremonies.

A few minutes after the Speaker, the Right Hon. William Court Gully, had taken his chair in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, Gen. Sir Michael Anthony Shrapnel Biddulph, appeared and summoned the Commons to the House of Lords, where the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Halsbury, read the Queen's speech. The speech was as follows:

"My Lords and Gentlemen: It has become necessary to make further provision for the expenses incurred by the operations of my armies in South Africa and China. I have summoned you to hold a special session in order that you may give your sanction to the enactments required for this purpose. You will not enter into other public matters requiring your attention until the ordinary meeting of Parliament in the Spring."

A number of women were present at the proceedings in the House of Lords, though the peers present numbered less than a dozen, apart from the four Royal Commissioners representing the Queen, one of whom was the Duke of Marlborough.

The ceremony was very brief. The Commoners afterward returned to the lower house, and business in the House of Lords was suspended until 3:30 o'clock P. M.

DEBATE IN THE LORDS.

The interesting and picturesque ceremony of swearing in the Peers, who included the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, and the Duke of Cambridge, together with the impression that Lord Rosebery would speak, attracted such a number of Peeresses and their daughters to the House of Lords later on as to fill the galleries allotted to them. United States Ambassador Choate and other foreign representatives were present. Mr. Choate was forced to find a place opposite to that which he usually occupies, owing to the crush. The attendance of Peers was unusually large.

The Earl of Latham, (Conservative,) in the uniform of the Royal Horse Guards, moved the address. He said he thought it could now be safely said that the end of the war was in sight. The volunteers had made their mark, and the colonies had shown that they were united to the motherland, never to be separated.

Lord Monkbretton (Liberal-Unionist) seconded the address in the same strain.

Lord Kimberley, the Liberal leader of the House of Lords, in the course of his remarks, animadverted strongly on the sudden dissolution of Parliament and on the imputations as to the Liberals during the election. He objected to the brevity and abruptness of the Queen's speech, and demanded a definite pronouncement of the Government's policy, in view of the novel and dangerous character of the recrudescence of hostilities in South Africa. He said he desired explanations of the alleged cruelties to the Boers, the burning of farms, and similar severities. He concurred in the annexation of the republics, but trusted that the Government possessed a definite policy for speedily concluding the war.

His Lordship said he was gratified at the Anglo-German agreement, but added an attempt to capture the Emperor and Dowager Empress of China would be an alarming undertaking.

LORD SALISBURY'S SPEECH.

Lord Salisbury, after paying a tribute to the skill of Lord Roberts and Gen. Kitchener, and to the bravery of the officers and soldiers, jocularly approved of Autumn elections on the ground that the people objected to traveling to the polls in wintry weather, while in Summer legislators were occupied with their Parliamentary duties.

In regard to South Africa, the Premier spoke with great solemnity. He said the Transvaalers, the Free Staters, and the world should understand that there could be no deviation from the policy of the Government as already outlined. Anything resembling independence could never be granted. The war must proceed to the inevitable issue. They must let it be felt that no one, by the issue of an insolent and audacious ultimatum, could force the British Government to humble itself and abandon its rights. He could never allow that a shred of independence should be left. How soon the Free States and the Transvaalers would have anything like self-governing powers depended on themselves. It might be years and it might be generations.

Regarding China, Lord Salisbury said he was unable to reveal anything, as it would be betraying not only the secrets of Great Britain, but the secrets of other nations. He was happy, however, to be able to quiet the fears of Lord Kimberley regarding the pursuit of the Emperor and Empress Dowager. He had never heard of such a suggestion. The concert existed, and the latest intelligence showed that it possessed a very reasonable vitality. He was more doubtful of the time when a satisfactory result would be achieved than of the fact that the concert of Europe would be successful.

Lord Salisbury, when delivering his speech, looked old and wearied, but his voice gathered strength and vigor as he proceeded. Meanwhile Lord Rosebery sat immersed in deep thought, his hat drawn over his brow.

ROSEBERY ATTACKS THE MINISTRY.

The feature of the session was Lord Rosebery's spirited attack on the Government. He was unsparing of his criticism of the dissolution of Parliament, the conduct of the war, the policy of the Government toward China, and everything handled by the Cabinet. He caustically commented on the reconstruction of the Cabinet, congratulating Lord Salisbury on being the chief of a family numbering so many capable administrators, the reference being to the inclusion in the Cabinet of so many of Lord Salisbury's relatives.

Lord Rosebery's comment on the charges against the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, was severe. He deprecated overbelief in the credibility of all the charges, but said it was evident that the head of the Cabinet had failed in proper supervision, and the pride of England in the purity of its public men had suffered.

The speech of the Liberal peer was powerful and more decidedly political than any he had delivered in some years. It was impassioned, dramatic in many parts, and directed straight at Lord Salisbury, who, though for the greater part of the time unmoved, smiled occasionally in a cynical way as though amused at the earnestness of his opponent.

The Duke of Devonshire (Liberal Unionist) replied to Lord Rosebery, and Lord Tweedmouth closed the debate for the Liberals.

The address was then agreed to, and the House adjourned until Monday.

An addition of to-day's debate was Lord Rosebery's reference to Lord Hardwicke, Under Secretary of State for India, who was a member of a firm of stock brokers.

The Duke of Devonshire explained that Lord Hardwicke had authorized him to announce that before accepting office he had arranged to become at the end of the year a sleeping partner in the firm.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

It was to a crowded house that the Speaker rose yesterday afternoon to submit the sessional orders, the reading of which, as usual, was interrupted by the motion of the Right Hon. James Lowther (Conservative) to eliminate the order prohibiting peers from interfering in elections. Mr. Lowther especially referred to Lord Rosebery as a delinquent during the recent election. The motion met its customary fate. It was buried by a vote of 326 to 68.

After the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, the Government leader, had given notice of the intention of the Government to absorb the whole time of the session, the Speaker read the Queen's speech, and the Hon. John Edward Gordon, (Conservative,) in a naval uniform, moved the address in reply. In so doing he made a lengthy defense of the war.

J. Fitzalan Hope (Conservative) seconded the address.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader, after allusions to the election, said the remarkable thing about the war was that the public knew so little about it and the harsh measures being taken against the people of South Africa, such as farm-burning. He asked the Government for information as to the intention of these proceedings.

Sir Henry said he was slow to believe that driving a stubborn enemy to despair was the best way to make him surrender. It was in a desire to end the war, but it was also in a desire to lead to promises of harmony and contentment that he invited the Government to declare its policy. He inquired why it should not be announced to the Boers that if they laid down their arms they would be allowed to return to their homes?

Sir Henry's arraignment of the Government was long and satirical. He declared that the Liberals were perfectly agreed that the Boer republics should be annexed to Great Britain, but said they wanted to know definitely what the Government proposed to do in the future before voting money.

All requests for information elicited nothing more than generalizations. Sir Henry contended, and therefore the Opposition would oppose the progress of the Vote in Supply.

MR. BALFOUR'S ARGUMENT.

Mr. Balfour, in reply, dwelt on the difficulties of the present position in South Africa. He said the men they were fighting were to be their fellow-subjects, and everything possible must be done to prevent embitterment. The Government had announced over and over again that it looked forward to a condition when the British and Dutch would have equal rights. It was the fault of the Boer leaders that the war was prolonged. In the meantime, the duty of the Government was to pursue vigorous military operations with humanity, not only from common morality, but with a statesmanlike view of the future.

After expressing in earnest tones the hearty desire of the Government to co-operate with the Opposition in doing anything to bring about a cessation of hostilities, Mr. Balfour said he realized deeply the terrible danger of imbittering the Dutch in South Africa. In order to show the difficulties confronting the British in distinguishing between combatants and non-combatants, he read an extract from the United States Army regulations showing the severity with which persons alternating as combatants and non-combatants were treated under the American organization.

While Mr. Balfour was in the middle of a solemn declaration that the Government would endeavor to temper necessity with mercy in dealing with a brave enemy, a Liberal called out, "It would be better for the Boers to be dead than be English."

£16,000,000 TO BE ASKED FOR?

At a late hour the Government laid on the table of the House of Commons the Supplementary War Estimate. The utmost secrecy is maintained regarding it, but report says that it asks for £13,000,000 for South Africa and £3,000,000 for China.

Sir Charles Dilke will, it is said, propose an amendment throwing a part of the cost of the South African war on the Netherlands Railway and the underground mining rights of the late Transvaal Government.

The Times intimates that the Government, in addition to the credits now being asked for, will take fresh borrowing powers during the present session, "in case it should become necessary to raise more money before the February session."

LORD ROSEBERY'S ATTITUDE.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—Referring editorially to Lord Rosebery's speech in the House of Lords yesterday, The Times, says:

"Lord Rosebery has come forward with the air of one who, if not now the party leader, may any day become such. We rejoice that he has done so. His speech makes us feel that his return will bring a valuable invigorating element once more into our public life."

BOERS WANTED THE WAR.

Revelations in Letter from Burgher Leader in Blue Book Issued Yesterday.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—A Blue Book of the South African dispatches from Jan. 3 to Oct. 24 was issued yesterday.

Sir Alfred Milner, the British High Commissioner, writing to Mr. Chamberlain, quotes from a letter dated Kroonstad, Sept. 25, 1899, and written by Mr. Blignaut, brother of P. J. Blignaut, State Secretary of the Orange Free State, as follows:

"The only thing we are afraid of is that Chamberlain, with his admitted fitfulness of temper, will cheat us out of a war and consequently out of an opportunity to annex Natal and Cape Colony and to form a Republican United States of South Africa."

The Blue Book deals largely with the Cape Colony rebels and martial law. The conclusion to be drawn from the mass of documents is the eagerness of the Cape Dutch to take up arms, and especially the willingness of of the border Dutch to join the invaders without compulsion.

Sir Alfred Milner, writing to Mr. Chamberlain on Sept. 5, cites a statement by Mr. Wessels, a member of the Cape House of Assembly and of the Afrikander Bund, that 65 per cent. of his constituents joined the Boers of their own accord. Reinforcing this, he said:

"Not only border Dutch but Dutchmen all over the Colony one by one made their way to the Boer lines."

PORTO RICANS GO TO HAWAII.

Men Say They Were Kidnapped for the Spreckels Sugar Plantation—Closely Guarded on Train.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Texas, Dec. 6.—Two tourist sleeping cars, into which were packed 194 natives of Porto Rico—men, women, and children—arrived on the Southern Pacific Railway to-day from New Orleans, and stopped here a few hours. The natives came direct from their island home, and are on the way to Honolulu to work on the Spreckels sugar plantation. They were closely guarded by labor agents, and are due to ship at San Francisco on a certain date.

To avoid affording them any opportunity for escape, the agents had the cars sidetracked at a way station in the great desert, 300 miles east of this point, and remained there three days, so as to reach San Francisco in time to make perfect connections with the ship. Among the natives were a number of intelligent men. They said they were decoyed from their homes aboard a ship ostensibly to land on the other side of their island.

The ship took them to New Orleans, where they were hustled aboard a train and dispatched westward under close guard.

The labor agents say they have a contract with Claus Spreckels to convey 2,500 of the Porto Rican natives to the Hawaiian Islands, to be worked on his sugar plantation.

TO DEVELOP SPONGE INDUSTRY

United States Government to Investigate the Florida Grounds.

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 6.—For the first time the United States Government will investigate the Florida sponge grounds with a view to a better development of the industry. John Y. Detwiler, President of the Florida Fish Commission, has just been notified to this effect by Commissioner Bowers of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, Washington, and it is officially stated that the Fish Commission steamer Fish Hawk will come to Florida Jan. 1 with a full staff of officers and men to take charge of this work. With regard to what is contemplated specifically Commissioner Bowers says:

"While the biological aspects of the sponges will not be neglected, the investigations will be addressed primarily to the economic questions involved, with a view to a development of the industry. The great extent of the grounds will probably necessitate two seasons' work. The more northern grounds will first be examined."

Florida is the only part of the United States producing sponges of a commercial value. There are to-day 310 vessels, with more than 2,000 men employed in this one industry, and it is conservatively estimated that the 1900-1901 crop will have a commercial value of $850,000. Sponges are found on the eastern and western coasts, but are more abundant on the west coast, owing to the equable temperature and moderate depth of the water and the absence of fierce hurricanes.

The sponge grounds of the Gulf of Mexico extend from the Florida reefs to St. Marks, and for a distance of fifteen miles from shore. The best sponges in color, texture, and size are indigenous to deep water, and as these command the highest prices in all markets the sponging vessels frequently work for days together out of sight of land.

SWINDLER IS AN OLD HAND.

Other Charges Against Man Who Gave Bogus Check to Matteawan Priest.

Special to The New York Times.

MATTEAWAN, N. Y., Dec. 6.—The man who yesterday succeeded in swindling the Rev. T. F. Kelley, rector of St. Joachim's Church, Matteawan, out of $5 by representing himself to be Surgeon General of the United States Army, and presenting to Father Kelley a bogus check for $650, is said to be wanted in many towns in this State.

A telegram was received this morning from Prof. Fletcher, Principal of the Rockland Military School at Nyack, saying that he could give important testimony against the man. He is said to have appeared at the Rockland Academy, saying he was Col. Alexander Flint, United States Army, and had a son whom he wished to have enter the school. He was shown over the school and invited to remain all night. When he started to go he claimed to have lost his pocketbook and seemed embarrassed. He drew a draft for $200 on Drexel & Co. of Philadelphia, and borrowed $7 on it, telling Prof. Fletcher to keep the balance and credit it for his son's tuition. The draft was returned marked "No funds."

Lieut. Charles Bradner, who has charge of the preparatory school at West Point, was also a sufferer. It is said the swindler succeeded in obtaining $10 from the Lieutenant, to whom he gave a check on a New York bank for a large amount.

Father Kelley refused to appear against the man to-day, but he was sent back to the Poughkeepsie jail. Lieut. Bradner has sworn out a warrant and will prosecute him.

HILL CONFERS WITH ENEMIES OF CROKER

TO FIGHT THE FRANCHISE TAX

He Sees the Sheehans, but Denies that He Is Organizing War Upon Tammany.

David B. Hill came to town yesterday on "legal business." Politicians by the dozen made efforts all day to see Mr. Hill, for the word had gone forth that he had come from Albany to organize a hunt for the Tammany tiger. Some of the politicians went so far as to claim that David B. Hill was here as a vice crusader. They claimed that he was going to act in an advisory capacity for the Committee of Fifteen appointed at the Chamber of Commerce meeting. Mr. Hill with a smile denied that he was organizing a tiger hunt or that he had taken up the sword of a vice crusader.

"I'm just down on law business, that's all," was the answer he gave to all inquiries.

That Mr. Hill did something outside of attending to law business was shown by his list of callers. First came a long talk with William C. Sheehan, probably in relation to the fight to repeal the franchise tax law. William C. Sheehan has, however, become prominent in the anti-Tammany fight as an aggressive factor.

Then John C. Sheehan, who has waged the war against Croker's domination in the Ninth Assembly Districts politics, made a call. He went to the law office of his brother, William, in Nassau Street, and failing to meet Mr. Hill there arranged for a long talk later at the Hoffman House.

Controller Coler also paid a visit to Mr. Hill. James O'Brien, who is organizing his forces to carry on a fight against Tammany, was also a caller. Elliot Danforth, Mr. Hill's representative in New York City, took a great interest in Mr. Hill's doings.

An epitome of Mr. Hill's movements, gathered from his interviews with friends during the day, resulted in the politicians settling these things for Mr. Hill:

That he will not take part or advise the Committee of Fifteen in the anti-vice crusade, or take any part in the fight for the moral purification of the city.

That Mr. Hill will not take an active part himself in the political fight against Tammany Hall and his old enemy, Richard Croker.

That Mr. Hill will give his advice and assistance to all organizations and men who want to go into the tiger-hunting business.

Mr. Hill's friends consider him a past master in the art of fighting Tammany Hall, and they claim that without his spending much time in New York he can direct the campaign against Mr. Croker's domination in State politics from his law offices in Albany.

Mr. Hill talked for himself yesterday. He denied emphatically that he was in New York to organize an anti-Tammany movement. He did not deny that he was seeing a good many politicians.

"They just drop in to see me," said Mr. Hill. "Of course I am always glad to see them. Always when I come to town I have appointments with people who want to see me about this and that—some want information and some want my autograph."

Mr. Hill smiled again. There were present at this time William C. Sheehan and James J. Coogan, President of Manhattan Borough, and a stanch friend of Mr. Croker. President Coogan denied that he was after Mr. Hill's autograph.

When pressed for an answer as to his intentions politically, Mr. Hill dictated the following statement:

"Well, my visit to New York at this time has no significance. I am not here for the purpose of assisting in the formation of any anti-Tammany organization. I know nothing about any such movement. Neither am I here to co-operate with the Committee of Fifteen, as some morning newspaper announced. My visit here is purely on law business."

That there is law business in Mr. Hill's visit became plain yesterday. Arrangements were in part made for the argument before the Court of Appeals in the fight started by the railroads of the State against the franchise tax law. Mr. Hill is acting, it is said, for the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, and also for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, through the law firm of Sheehan & Collins.

Frank Platt and Albert B. Boardman also represent many railroads, and it will have to be arranged between these three lawyers who will make the main argument to have the franchise tax law declared invalid. It was said yesterday that Messrs. Platt and Boardman were anxious to do the talking. Mr. Hill will probably conduct the fight, as he appeared before Gov. Roosevelt when the Ford Franchise Tax bill was introduced in its original form, attacked the constitutionality of the bill, and the result was that amendments were made to the measure.

After seeing Mr. Hill, John C. Sheehan declared that Chief Devery was responsible for the condition of affairs on the east side. He said:

"The Police Department was always held responsible for evil conditions, and some of the criticism was just, but under Devery the Police Department has not a rag of decency left. Devery is responsible, and not the Police Commissioners."

A single-headed commission with power of removal of Captains for misconduct is, according to Mr. Sheehan, the only way to improve conditions in New York City. Mr. Sheehan declared against the State Constabulary bill, proposed by Senator Platt.

WALSH'S MURDERER CAUGHT.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 6.—The confession of Bullock, the negro desperado shot down by Pinkertons in Norfolk County last night, that he is the man twice sentenced to death for the murder of ex-Chief of Police Walsh of Freehold, N. J., was a surprise.

When captured, even after being shot, he fought to conceal the evidence of his identity. He probably will die of his wounds.

Bullock killed ex-Chief of Police Walsh of Freehold, N. J., Nov. 11, 1899, at Woodbridge. Walsh was acting as a constable and tried to serve a civil summons on the negro.

Bullock was tried three times for the offense. The first trial resulted in a verdict of guilty, but the verdict was reversed. The jury disagreed at the second trial and convicted him at the third. This verdict was also reversed.

While awaiting his fourth trial the negro escaped, on Sept. 7, 1900.

WILLIAM C. WHITNEY'S OFFER.

ALBANY, Dec. 6.—At the regular monthly meeting of the Fisheries, Game and Forest Commission to-day a communication was received from William C. Whitney of New York, expressing a lively interest in the proposition to introduce moose into the Adirondack forest, and offering to render any assistance possible to secure a successful result.

Mr. Whitney advised the commission that he would very much like to see elk also introduced into the forest, and offered to give a number of these animals to the State for the purpose of beginning the experiment. The elk which Mr. Whitney offers are now a part of the herd quartered on his Lenox farm.

The commission adopted a resolution thanking Mr. Whitney for his interest in the matter, and Messrs. Wadsworth, Wood, and Middleton were designated as a special committee to confer with him.

TUG TO GO 15,000 MILES

Lieut. Commander Sherman and Lieut. Brainard on Board—The Crew's Mascot a Yellow Dog.

Naval officers are looking forward to the voyage to Manila that has been ordered by the Navy Department for the little tug Wampatuck, which has been doing service in the Brooklyn Navy Yard for some time. The order came as a surprise to the officers in the yard. If she completes the long trip it will be the first time on record that so small a tug has been able to do so. As to the general purpose or specific reasons for sending the Wampatuck to Manila naval officers in the yard confess complete ignorance. None will even go so far as to make a surmise on the subject.

It was generally believed that the tug would leave the yard yesterday, but inquiry revealed the fact that she is not expected to go until Sunday. The Wampatuck, although a small vessel, will be dignified for its long journey by having practically two commanders. Lieut. Commander F. H. Sherman is nominally in charge, but when the tug sails she will also have on board Lieut. F. R. Brainard. Lieut. Brainard commanded the Uncas during the Spanish-American war. His rank is little below that of Commander Sherman, and there was general surprise also when it was learned that he had been selected to accompany the former on the tug. It is generally believed that the reason this was done was to provide against any complication that might arise on a 15,000-mile voyage. Naval men say it is just possible that the Commander might be incapacitated by illness at some time, and the presence of another officer on board would be highly necessary.

Besides the two officers, there will be twenty-three men on board, and the crew will be further augmented by the presence of one dog. "Just a plain, ornery fice," as one of the men explained yesterday, "but where we go he goes, be it Manila, hell, or Jericho." And the crew of the Wampatuck is not going to depend entirely upon the "yaller purp" for amusement in its sail through Eastern waters. One of the men is an expert on the "in and out jigger," which, in the language of the sea, means an accordion. He said yesterday that it was "oiled up, ready for business, and going to make all hands shake a reel before they got a sniff of the Eastern breezes."

The Wampatuck will go first to Norfolk, then to Bermuda. The people on board half expect to have a time canoeing the one that sends them to Manila before they get very far away. But if there is no change, the Wampatuck will then follow out an itinerary which will take her to Madeira, thence to Gibraltar, and other Mediterranean ports, to the Suez Canal and Red Sea, across the Indian Ocean, touching at Bombay, Batavia and Sumatra. And then the tug will head for the Philippines, where, if winds are fair and waves not too opposing, she will arrive in three months.

"I rather think, however," said Lieut. Brainard yesterday, "that we'll celebrate our arrival in Manila and the Fourth of July simultaneously. Why are we going? You must ask of the man in the moon. He may know. I don't."

The Wampatuck was on the southern coast during the Spanish war, and saw service as far west as Cienfuegos. She was engaged in cable-cutting, and a bent stanchion on her pilothouse tells the story of a Spanish shell.

A CURIOUS DIVORCE PLEA.

Mrs. Ruscoe Alleges Cruelty Because Her Husband Tried to Frighten His Mother-in-Law.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Dec. 6.—Amos Ruscoe of New Fairfield wants a divorce from his wife on the plea of cruelty, and the wife has brought a counter suit against her husband on the same grounds. The case was heard to-day in the Superior Court, and some interesting testimony was brought out. The couple were married in Danbury in June, 1899, and separated last August. After her husband left her, Mrs. Ruscoe did not see him until a short time ago, when he drove up to the house with several wagons and a gang of men for the purpose of carrying the furniture away.

According to Mrs. Ruscoe's testimony, those in the house locked and barred the doors, but Ruscoe and his assistants burst them in and proceeded to take everything in the house. "Everything here is mine," declared Ruscoe, dramatically, "and all are mine," he continued, turning to his wife.

When asked to specify some act of cruelty on her husband's part, Mrs. Ruscoe told how he complained of the presence of his mother-in-law, who, according to an agreement before marriage, lived with them. "He used to get up in the night when the rest of us were sleeping," she said, "and prowl around the house by the hour, making unearthly noises, which he afterward said were caused by ghosts. This was to alarm my mother and make her go away."

It was alleged that when Ruscoe took the furniture he also took everything in sight, even to his wife's wedding presents and a pair of shoes belonging to his mother-in-law. The mother-in-law was present in court, and there was bitterness in her voice as she told of driving to Danbury the next day in her slippers to purchase another pair of shoes. No decision has been made in the case yet.

Mrs. Ruscoe was formerly Miss Addie M. Paedee of Greenfield Hill, near Bridgeport.

C. E. YERKES MADE PRESIDENT.

Directors of Chicago Elevated Elect Him to Succeed Howard Abel.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6.—Directors of the Lake Street Elevated road to-day selected Charles E. Yerkes, son of Charles T. Yerkes, to succeed Howard Abel as President of the system.

Mr. Abel did not resign to make way for Mr. Yerkes especially, but to go to London to assist C. T. Yerkes in his English enterprises.

It is said that D. H. Louderback and C. T. Yerkes had severed their business relations permanently in consequence of mutual dissatisfaction.

Mr. Abel will take hold of Mr. Yerkes's foreign affairs at once, paying attention to the underground railway, for which privileges have been granted.

Texas Railway Telegraphers Strike.

FORT WORTH, Texas, Dec. 6.—A strike of telegraphers took place at 11 A. M. today on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé Railroad. Trains between Galveston, Texas, and Purcell, I. T., are tied up. As members of the Order of Railway Telegraphers, the operators demanded a revision of rules and regulations and increased salaries. The officials expressed a willingness to refer the matter of wages to arbitrators, but refused to amend its rules.

COMMANDER FREEMAN ILL.

Board of Survey Inquires Into the Naval Officer's Physical Condition.

It is possible that Commander Freeman, now at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, may be permanently retired, as a result of a physical break-down. Some time ago Commander Freeman showed signs of nervous prostration. He was sent to the Naval Hospital, where after careful nursing he apparently recovered. Two weeks ago he was discharged from the hospital and returned to his duties in the yard.

Almost immediately after resuming work it was noticed that the Commander's health was again failing. The climax came when the accident happened to Lieut. Commander R. T. Hall of the steam engineering department. Commander Freeman was greatly affected by the occurrence, and it is believed that it greatly aggravated his illness and hastened the break-down. For a week or more Dr. Burns, Surgeon of the yard, has been attending the Commander, whom he found suffering with a general nervous break-down. The Commander's mother and sister were also with him.

Dr. Burns finally decided that a board of survey had better examine into Commander Freeman's condition, and the board met in the Surgeon's office at the yard yesterday afternoon. The board included Dr. Riggs, Dr. Stokes, and Dr. Speer.

Their finding will be reported to Admiral Barker, who, in turn, will report to the Secretary of the Navy. Dr. Burns said yesterday that it was not within his province to determine whether Commander Freeman should be temporarily or permanently retired.

"It is simply a case of nervous prostration," he said, "and the board of survey must determine that point. The trouble is all our officers are overworked. We need more officers. I should not be at all surprised if we have more cases of this kind."

Commander Freeman entered the service in 1873, and was made a Lieut. Commander on March 3, 1899. During the Spanish-American war he served on the Newark and the Indiana, and saw hard service.

THE BIG TELEPHONE COMBINE.

Plans for the $50,000,000 Consolidation Practically Agreed On.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 6.—Plans for the combination of the independent telephone companies of the United States are rapidly nearing completion and details will be announced shortly. An agreement has been practically reached. Alexander Brown of this city is a leader in the movement.

The proposition is to combine the Maryland Telephone and Telegraph Company of Baltimore, the Pittsburg and Allegheny Telephone and Telegraph Company of Pittsburg, the Home Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, the Allegheny County Telephone Company of Pennsylvania, the Delmarvia Telephone Company of Wilmington, Del.; the Erie Telegraph and Telephone Company of Boston, which controls the Cleveland Telephone Company; the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Company, the Southwestern Telegraph and Telephone Company, the Michigan Telephone Company, and the Wisconsin Telephone Company. The Telephone, Telegraph and Cable Company of America, the largest of its kind in the United States, will be included. The Erie Telegraph and Telephone Company and affiliated lines operate one-sixth of all the telephones in the territory of the American Bell Telephone Company.

Behind the proposed combination are some of the most influential capitalists and institutions in the United States, including the banking house of Alexander Brown & Sons, Harry A. Parr of Baltimore, the Astors of New York, Henry C. Payne of Cleveland, Charles J. Glidden, David S. Greenough, Asa C. Russell, and Levi Sprague of Massachusetts.

The capitalization will be about $50,000,000. The new company will not invite a war with the Bell Company, but is determined to protect its rights, and will be prepared to engage in hostilities should the Bell Company be disposed to harass it. The new company will have a total of 170,000 subscribers.

CAPTURED GHOST'S EXCUSE.

Haunted South River Park to Scare His Daughters Into Staying Home Nights.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 6.—A ghost, which has been frightening the people of South River, near here, for some time past, was captured last night by a party of young men, and, when the sheets and other snowy vestures with which he was attired were removed, the apparition was found to be the flesh and blood reality of George Henderson, who had sought this method of frightening his daughters into staying at home nights.

The "ghost" was known generally to haunt the vicinity of Washington Park, at South River, and the young men, led by Ellis Van Hise, decided to lie in wait for it. Late in the evening the "spook" appeared as usual, and the men sprang out and seized him. The ghost showed fight, but was soon overpowered. His captors were greatly surprised when they recognized the features of Henderson, who is a well-known and generally respected citizen of South River. He admitted that it was he who had been haunting the park, and gave the reason mentioned above. He promised to stop his haunting habits and was released.

Henderson is a brother-in-law of Middlesex County Collector David Serviss. His daughters are the Misses Jessie, Alice, and Esther Henderson, and they are pretty and popular.

AN IMMENSE AUDIENCE.

HAVERHILL, Mass., Dec. 6.—Cullen E. Sneil, General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association in this city, has completed the arrangements whereby Gov. Roosevelt will address on Sunday, Dec. 30, an audience of young men upon the subject of "Manhood and Citizenship." The address will be given in Carnegie Hall, New York City, at 4 o'clock, under the auspices of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association.

A copy of the Governor's address will previously be sent to every Young Men's Christian Association in the United States and Canada, and at the same time it is given in New York it will be read to the assemblages in other places. William E. Dodge will preside at Carnegie Hall.

The audience thus addressed by Gov. Roosevelt will, it is claimed, be the greatest ever known in this country.

MR. DAVIDSON'S NIGHT SCHOOL.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Dec. 6.—The Rev. W. W. Davidson of the Sleepy Hollow Congregational Church, which is situated near the home of Henry O. Havemeyer, is meeting with considerable difficulty in his attempts to establish a night school, chiefly for the benefit of the Italians who live at the foot of Palmer's Hill, near the church.

Mr. Davidson is a Yale graduate and came here two years ago to take charge of the church. Mr. Havemeyer contributed largely toward the church on the promise of Mr. Davidson to make an effort to improve the neighborhood.

The church officials held a meeting recently and refused to allow the minister to have a night school in the church building. Mr. Davidson then tried to get permission to use the public schoolhouse for his night school, but without success.

It is now Mr. Davidson's purpose to start an evening school without aid either from the church or the school district. It is understood that Mr. Havemeyer will give him substantial support.

COLER AND SHEPARD SPEAK FOR PROGRESS

Reform Club Discusses Conditions in Greater New York.

E. P. WHEELER'S ADDRESS

Pleas for the Closing of Official Paths to Tribute and Avoidance of Class Misunderstandings.

The Reform Club gave a dinner last night at the clubhouse, 233 Fifth Avenue, under the direct auspices of the club's Committee on City Affairs. After the dinner prominent speakers discussed the subject, "The Municipal Condition of Greater New York, and How to Improve It." There were 113 club members and guests at the tables. Charles S. Fairchild was to have presided, but at the last moment found it impossible to attend, and Wallace Macfarlane, the President of the club, was called upon to take his place.

Among the prominent guests seated at the other tables were John De Witt Warner, W. J. Ives, J. Stanley Brown, George Seward, George Foster Peabody, Joseph Larocque, Sr., Francis Jordan, J. G. Agar, Franklin Pierce, Edward S. Kauffman, W. E. Curtis, ex-Gov. Thompson of South Carolina, John Kiernan, Capt. F. M. Gibson, Samuel Greenbaum, Henry De Forest Baldwin, and Charles L. Biggs.

The dinner began at 7:30 o'clock and it was not until the cigars were handed around, about is to spend the money of the people to the best advantage. As a rule, the demand for economy in the City Government is not that less money be spent, but that expenditure shall be wisely directed for the best interest of all the people. It is not what we lend, but what we receive for it.

THE PROVINCE OF EDUCATION.

"There should be a connecting link between our public school system and the civil service. Ninety per cent. of our children, either through force of necessity or inclination, leave the schools before the age of fifteen years. I believe the main aim of the Department of Education should be to give that vast majority such commonsense education as would fit them for the everyday walks of life."

Mr. Coler said he was not opposed to high schools, but believed entrance to them should be by course of natural selection and reward for work done in the grammar schools. Civil service, he said, was now firmly established in the American system of government, and as the Government required special knowledge for employes, it should afford means of obtaining it. In conclusion, Mr. Coler said:

"I wish to ask all of you who are interested in the welfare of the City of New York, and in the attempt to bring about reform, not to exercise your entire energies in seeing the bad side of New York. I think our city has been greatly hurt by well-meaning citizens who are continually talking about the evils that exist in our great city and forgetting to mention the good. There is no city on the face of the earth that has as many good institutions as our city and while we try to stamp out that which is evil, let us endeavor to do so in a measure by the developing of better and brighter things in their place." [Great applause.]

There was much enthusiasm when Mr. Macfarlane introduced Edward M. Shepard. Mr. Shepard said that it was impossible not to notice the change that had made itself manifest among reformers of late years. He said he was unable to determine whether the change was in the men themselves, and due to a declining optimism, or whether it was a change outside.

At all events, he said, there had been after every reform movement which he had known in late years, and which was at the time thought to be a marking period in municipal affairs, a feeling of chagrin and disappointment.

MR. SHEPARD'S OPTIMISM.

"As for myself," said Mr. Shepard. "I am incorrigibly optimistic. There is vice, but there is less vice than there was. There is misgovernment, but not so much and so flagrant as there was. I believe that when conditions are at their lowest they are not as low as they were, and when they are at their highest they are higher than they ever were before.

"I believe, therefore, that there is no cause for that depressing grief or disappointment over the results of past reform movements. An aroused public sentiment is manifest. In the pulpit, in the press, and in conversation it is evident that the tide is beginning to rise.

"We are at the beginning of a movement from which we can expect great results. It is useless to tell men like you that when we find a moral fervor the wise men among us ought to think to what use that fervor may be applied; to what practical purpose it can be put.

"The election is still ten months away, but the meeting of the Legislature occurs in one month. We are the creatures of legislation, and on it, and by it, the framework of the City Government is founded. If we can do something to make a better framework, to build something that will last, then I think we have put that fervor, that aroused public sentiment, into a fruitful channel.

"We have before us the report of the revisors of the charter. Here is the practical situation, not too large or too difficult to be dealt with in a short time. Now my proposition is this: If this report is sound, and it is my opinion that it is; if it makes for abidingly good government, the first thing to bend our attention to is to have this revision actually made into a legislative enactment, and New York will get what I might call the benediction of an improved framework of City Government.

"We are apt to think as the election approaches that the right thing to do, in fact, the paramount thing to do, is to defeat that party which is responsible for existing conditions—in this instance, Tammany Hall. Now, I ask those whose memories go back to the downfall of Tweed, to the campaign of 1872, which resulted in the election of Mr Havemeyer as Mayor, to remember the disappointment that resulted.

"Corruption, stupidity, and ignorance were not abolished, and no one can suggest a single monument that might be erected to any great deed performed by that administration. Even later we have had this kind of disappointment. If any monument might be erected for any abiding act of the Strong administration it would be for the uniforming of the force of street cleaners.

"Even Tammany Hall, with all the execration that has been heaped on it, has given us some good men, notably Hewitt, Grace, and Coler, but as soon as Tammany Hall discovered that a man was fit for the position he occupied it found that he was unfit for Tammany Hall.

"What we want to lay stress on, it seems to me, is not the mere triumph of personal candidates. The question is broader than that. What has to be done now is to bring about the adoption of that masterly report of Mr. Rives and his associates. Probably one of the best proofs of its worth is that the bosses are against it.

"It is for us to crystallize public opinion and compel the men who hold legislative power to adopt that revised charter. That would do more good than to have an archangel in the Mayor's chair and a body of angels as members of the Municipal Council."

Mr. Shepard spoke strongly against a divided responsibility and in favor of that part of the charter which gives the Mayor the continual power of removal. He gave as an instance of the good resulting from according increased power to the Mayor in the matter of appointments the Roosevelt bill, which allowed the head of the Municipal Government to make appointments without Aldermanic sanction.

He said that if the revision could, by a tour de force of public sentiment be forced through the Legislature, then that Campaign would have at once an enormous influence on the campaign that was to follow.

MR. WHEELER'S PLEA.

Everett P. Wheeler, who spoke next, dwelt on the necessity of all persons interested in municipal improvement standing together. He said that it would be well not to inquire in a municipal campaign what a man had stood for politically in the past, but to be sure only that he was on the side of good government at present.

"The greatest vice in the City of New York," he said, "is not vice itself. Legislation cannot stop that, but it is possible for the City Government to repress the outward manifestations of vice, putting it forward on the streets. That which is the greatest vice in itself can be done away with. It has been done, and can be done again.

"Another step is to stop the making of official paths or roads, to revenue. We can appeal to that great body of people who want no favors—who want to be let alone to do their own work in their own way, and who want nothing to do with blackmail, either by the police, by the Health Department, or the Building Department, or any other."

In closing Mr. Wheeler advised his hearers to work with the Citizens' Union "to put down," he said, "the infamous crowd who have made merchandise of our honor, violated their oaths, and sold themselves for a mess of pottage."

The following letter from St. Clair McKelway to Mr. Agar was read. After regretting that another appointment made his attendance impossible, Mr. McKelway said:

"But I shall watch with sympathetic interest the counsels and suggestions which the speakers on that evening may advance. Experience in efforts to stop the sale of law to crime and the purchase of protection by shame for money, convinces me that it can alone be done by the political destruction of those perpetrating, promoting, or permitting it; that it is useless to expect the reform of an abuse so monstrous by those in active or passive complicity with persons or organizations responsible for and profiting by the evils which abound; and that any endeavor to end the abomination, without a sane, strong, and lasting union of true and practical civic patriotism will be only a picturesque spasm, not a successful war.

"Care must also be taken to protect the movement from the leadership of those who mean well, but who do not know how, and whose reputation as public workers rests on the number of wrongs that have been really strengthened by their intemperance of speech and by their unteachable errors of judgment."

BROKER CHARLES W. MORGAN ASSIGNS

The Papers Name Employes as Preferred Creditors.

IS ARRAIGNED IN COURT

Witnesses Tell How They Lost Their Money In Discretionary Operations —Chief McClusky Active.

Charles W. Morgan, the stockbroker, of 71 Broadway, who was arrested at his office in the Empire Building on Wednesday on charges of grand larceny and conspiracy to defraud, was busy yesterday. His first care was to file in the County Clerk's office, through his lawyers, Niles & Johnson, an assignment—without preferences, except as to this week's salaries of employes—to Bert Hanson of Ritch, Woodford, Bovee & Wallace. His insolvency was not, however, reported to the Consolidated Exchange, and his clearing sheet there went through on a small credit balance.

Then he surrendered on his bail bond at the Centre Street Police Court, where he, his bookkeeper, Michael Hart, and Claude Watson Turner, another employe, were held for examination by Magistrate Zeller after two alleged victims of "discretionary" methods had testified to their experiences.

John B. McKenzie and Lewis C. Van Riper of the Bowling Green Building cannot be found. They are said to be in with Morgan. Assignee Hanson was not able to say what assets and liabilities Morgan—he being all that there was of C. W. Morgan & Co.—had. One of Morgan's legal advisers placed the indebtedness of his client at not more than $100,000. He would not make a guess at assets. Other opinions were that the failure involves about $175,000, with small chance of assets of importance.

A feature of the case developed yesterday afternoon was that Morgan's business on the floor of the Consolidated Exchange was transacted by brokers—W. R. Whitner, who had desk room in "C. W. Morgan & Co.'s" offices, and D. B. Mumford, who had a desk in an office at 39 Pine Street.

President Wagar of the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange said that hitherto Morgan's transactions were so regular that no suspicion was excited. He will probe the charges against Morgan thoroughly. He does not at present suspect any member of the Exchange. Chief Detective McClusky hints that other "discretionary" and "bucket shop" concerns in the Wall Street district are shortly to receive his attention.

Morgan's assignment to Bert Hanson was filed shortly after the opening of the County Clerk's office. It recited that the assignor had offices at 71 and 1440 Broadway, and in the Drexel building, Philadelphia. Mr. Hanson nominated White & Ottleman as his attorneys. Morgan had no commercial rating. He joined the Consolidated in 1892, after six years' dealings in grocers' sundries at 122 Broad Street, failed on account of about $100 in 1896, and was rehabilitated last February. He asserted that he possessed $250,000, of which $40,000 was in real estate. His brother, W. J. Morgan, was his partner until Nov. 11, 1898, when he retired.

Assignee Hanson went in the Morgan offices as soon as he received his appointment and during the day talked with about two hundred customers.

"I was put here this morning," said Mr. Hanson. "I never saw Mr. Morgan, and I do not know how I came to be chosen. I do know that neither I, my firm, nor my attorneys has ever had anything to do with the assignor.

"I am here, and I want to emphasize this, to get together the assets, the amount of which I have not an idea, and administer them for the benefit of the creditors. What the liabilities are I cannot guess. Morgan's books are at Police Headquarters. I and my attorney, Mr. White, will go over them there. My hands were not tied by the assignor, his attorneys, or any one representing him or them. I want to say that creditors will help their and my interests by writing to me, giving full details of their claims. The offices of the assignee will be open for several weeks to facilitate the winding up of the business. Morgan's banking was done at the Seaboard National Bank. I have not learned how his account stands. I have thirty days to file a schedule, and it will be some time before I know how matters stand. I have talked with many creditors of the concern to-day. Not one complained that Morgan had used them other than well."

EXCHANGE NOT NOTIFIED.

President Wagar of the Consolidated Exchange said that no notice of the assignment had been officially received, so that no announcement was made from the rostrum by Chairman Mott.

"Morgan's clearing sheet," he added, "went through to-day with a credit balance of $59.74. Morgan will be suspended when announcement of his insolvency is made here. Then action could be taken on evidence of dishonest practices or conduct prejudicial to the welfare of the Exchange. Morgan's clearing sheets have always gone through. His transactions on the floor have always appeared to be carried on the sheets. This case will have my closest attention. Ever since I was elected President I have been fighting 'discretionary' business, 'wash sales,' and 'bucketing.' I do not know of any member of the Exchange who is in these schemes, nor do I suspect any one."

Mr. Wagar, however, said that two members of the Consolidated were known to have transacted C. W. Morgan's business on the floor—W. R. Whitner, who had desk room in Morgan's office, and D. B. Mumford of 39 Pine Street and 44 East Seventy-eighth Street. Neither was found yesterday. One of Morgan's clerks corroborated Mr. Wagar's statement, and said that the brokers named did his business at the Consolidated because he was too busy to leave the office. The clerk did not know where Whitner lived. At Mumford's home a member of his family said that she did not know where he was or when he would return.

Before the case of Morgan and his bookkeeper, Michael Hart, was called at the Centre Street Court in the morning, Detective McConville had placed under arrest Claude Watson Turner, an employe of Van Riper and McKenzie. Turner, who says he lives at Highwood, N. J., but who was reported to reside at 624 West End Avenue, near Morgan's home, 627 West End Avenue, was much in evidence at Police Headquarters Wednesday night and early yesterday morning. He told a plausible story about his subordination to McKenzie and Van Riper, and wanted the keys of their office in the Bowling Green Building. McConville knew that Turner was wanted in Chicago with McKenzie and Van Riper for "bucket shop" dealings, and he had in his pocket a "come-on" circular designed to interest hotel keepers signed by Turner. The detective humored Turner so that he went to the Centre Street Court unsuspectingly, and was there placed under arrest on the same charges as Morgan and Hart.

When the prisoners were arraigned Morgan was conspicuous because of his natty, well-groomed appearance and air of unconcern. Assistant District Attorney McIntyre came and shook hands with him. Assistant District Attorney Byrne was ready to act for the people. Mr. McIntyre asked Magistrate Zeller to adjourn the hearing. He said he was prosecuting Leonard A. Watson, John Evans, and Ferdinand Gardiner, editors of a Wall Street publication, on a charge of blackmail prefered by the prisoner, Morgan, the hearing in which case is set for to-morrow. Mr. McIntyre did not wish his complaining witness to be discredited in the action for attempting to extort money under threat of publishing an article reflecting upon Morgan's business integrity. Assistant District Attorney Byrne opposed Mr. McIntyre's motion strenuously.

A PECULIAR STATE OF AFFAIRS.

"This is a peculiar state of affairs," said he, "when one Assistant District Attorney defends a prisoner and another prosecutes him. No matter if Morgan has charged other people with blackmail, that does not mitigate his own offense. These people, I propose to prove, are guilty of grand larceny or conspiracy."

"There is no relation between these two cases," replied Mr. McIntyre, and he explained that he merely wished to prevent a conflict of dates set for the hearings. This explanation satisfied Mr. Byrne, and Magistrate Zeller directed the examination to proceed. W. D. Bailey, the complaining witness, of Mattawan, N. J., and Robert Daglish of Morristown, N. J., were examined.

Mr. Bailey testified that McKenzie had persuaded him to make a deposit of $500 with C. W. Morgan & Co., the investment of which McKenzie was to direct. Morgan gave him a receipt for the $500, he said. "My arrangement with Morgan was," said Mr. Bailey, "that he was to operate for me one month free of charge, and after that time he was to have 25 per cent. of the proceeds. The understanding between us was that I should have notice from McKenzie and Morgan of each transaction made."

"At the end of the first month I received a notice from Morgan that a profit of $200 had been made with the original $500. I endeavored to have Morgan take out a commission, but he refused. After this first notice I received no more, and all efforts to obtain a statement of the condition of my account were unavailing until after the lapse of some time I was told that my investment and profit, amounting to $700, had been wiped out."

Mr. Daglish testified that he had lost $500 in precisely the same manner.

Magistrate Zeller decided to hold the prisoner in $5,000 bail for examination in Jefferson Market Court on Dec. 13. At the request of H. B. Johnson, Morgan's counsel, Hart's bail was reduced to $3,000. Arthur J. Moore of 250 West Twenty-third Street furnished bail for Morgan and Hart. Turner was committed to the Tombs.

Assistant District Attorney Byrne, after classing the scheme as bold, venable, and not redeemed by any new feature from the old traps for those who are credulous and money-hungry, said that the District Attorney's office had been quietly getting evidence in regard to Morgan's and other "discretionary" concerns since Gen. Daniel E. Sickles's adventure with Shera. Chief Detective McClusky had been active in the matter.

"Morgan, McKenzie, Van Riper, Turner, and their allies," added Mr. Byrne, simply played 'both ends against the middle.' Morgan dealt with the dupes attracted by the others. They were led on by apparent success until shearing time came, when they were wiped out in summary fashion. Turner's rôle was that of soother and consoler to the plucked pigeons. I am surprised, however, that reputable Wall Street brokers who know of the existence of such concerns as Morgan's did not come to the District Attorney's office with information. They would have saved many from being cheated. We shall take up any case against 'discretionary' and 'bucket shop' men when there is a proper complaint supported by evidence."

THE ONE CONVICTION.

According to a member of the District Attorney's staff, the court records of New York County show the conviction of only one "discretionary" pool operator, that case now being on appeal. James B. Kellogg was the broker convicted by W. M. K. Olcott, specially appointed to prosecute.

H. B. Johnson of counsel for Morgan said last evening that he understood that his client was preparing a statement for the public, but could not say when it would be ready. At Morgan's house precautions had been taken against undesired visitors. The door was kept on chain and opened about an inch by a woman, who denied that Morgan was in the house and asserted that he would not return until to-day.

Van Riper's office, at 11 Broadway, was closed. McKenzie's was in charge of a boy, who said he was employed by the prisoner Turner, and that he would give no information about anything or anybody. Detectives were in the neighborhood of the Bowling Green Building last night. Chief Detective McClusky is keenly intent on bringing Van Riper to book. As a preparer and distributor of catchy, fool-trap circulars, McClusky says, he has no equal. He was identified with the Charles B. Lawrence & Co. firm, which failed recently. Van Riper was last year identified with a racing information bureau in the Bowling Green Building, which collapsed under exposure.

THE PHILADELPHIA CREDITORS.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 6.—An attachment for the benefit of local creditors upon the deposit of the Philadelphia branch of C. W. Morgan & Co. was issued this afternoon. The funds of the branch were kept in the Tradesmen's National Bank, in the Drexel Building. The attachment also covers the handsome office furnishings of the Rooms 921 and 924 Drexel Building, where the firm was located. The cashier of the Tradesmen's Bank stated this afternoon that the amount on deposit was not large, being, as he supposed, merely the running expense account of the branch.

This morning the offices were practically deserted save for the presence of two or three customers and the attendants. No business was transacted, as the telegraph operator could get no response from the New York office. The persons connected with the place professed great surprise at the arrest of Mr. Morgan and his bookkeeper in New York and were at a loss to explain the reason therefor.

Albert D. Booz, the manager, was greatly agitated over the news, and said, in speaking of it: "It is as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. I knew nothing of it until I reached the office at 9:10 this morning and was shown the account in a New York paper. I cannot explain it in any way."

TWO NEW SMALLPOX CASES.

Two new cases of smallpox were reported to the Board of Health yesterday, bringing the total of those that have so far appeared in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx up to 47. The first case reported was that of Katie Sky, twenty-eight years old, of 163 West End Avenue. She was taken to North Brother Island.

The second sufferer was Mary Bradford, thirty-six years old, colored, a cook in the family of Mrs. Lee, colored, on the third floor of the three-story tenement 200 West Thirty-seventh Street. She also was taken to North Brother Island. Elizabeth Oliver, twenty years old, of 201 West End Avenue, who was removed to the island a few days ago, died yesterday.

Dr. Blauvelt, Chief Inspector of Contagious Diseases, said that the work of vaccinating people all over the city was progressing satisfactorily. At the headquarters of the Board of Health, Fifty-sixth Street and Sixth Avenue, over 500 people called during the day, asking to be vaccinated. Most of them were mothers, who had their children with them.

"We have no fault to find with the attention which we find the public in general has given to our warning," remarked Dr. Blauvelt. "The owners of factories and the proprietors of hotels and large business houses continue to help the work by sending requests to have all their employes vaccinated. Carelessness and ignorance, however, are responsible for many who do not come to be inoculated."

The rooms at 68 Elm Street did a big vaccination business, many residents of that section having become frightened into accepting the assistance of the Health Board physicians.

Dr. Dillingham's corps of assistants continues to meet difficulty in the infected districts, where they are sent to combat the disease. Diplomacy and persuasion are necessary to induce many ignorant or obstinate persons to submit to inoculation. As a rule, however, little trouble is encountered, and in some cases the doctors are openly welcomed.

The fact that many persons are being vaccinated by their private physicians is shown by the number of orders sent in for the vaccine virus by doctors and druggists. The majority of these orders are from practitioners situated in the more wealth" part of the city.

VACCINATION ON 'CHANGE.

The upper floor of the New York Stock Exchange building was yesterday afternoon again converted into temporary medical quarters, the work of vaccinating the employes of the Exchange being continued and practically concluded. As on the previous day, the doctors began work almost immediately after the sounding of the gong announcing the close of business. There are over 400 Exchange employes, largely made up of messenger boys and doorkeepers, and the work of vaccination—ordered done by the Committee of Arrangements of the Stock Exchange—was not concluded yesterday.

On the floor of the Exchange many "danger signs" were displayed by brokers and messengers in the form of white cloth or paper pinned around the vaccinated arm, somewhat suggestive of the badge worn by ambulance attendants. When trading became active, however, and the brokers excitedly pressed forward while messengers rushed to and fro, the warnings were inclined to be neglected, with a consequent rather free and easy flow of wordo on the part of the individuals affected.

CHICAGO RESORTS CLOSED.

Seven of the Worst of Them Shut Up by Order of the Mayor—Plan for Services in Saloons Abandoned.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6.—In a sweeping order directed to Chief of Police Kipley, Mayor Harrison to-day revoked the licenses of seven of the most notorious resorts, and informed the keepers of other dens that unless they close their doors to the demimonde their privileges will likewise be withdrawn.

This action was quite unexpected, although the press and the pulpit of the city have been making war on the saloons and places of questionable character for some time.

Incidentally with the announcement of the Mayor's step comes the news that the plan of Chicago ministers to conduct religious services in the saloons and resorts with a view to reforming the frequenters will have to be abandoned. It was in most of the places that have been compelled to close their doors that the preachers intended to hold services.

Since Sunday the conditions at every saloon between the river and Thirty-first Street and in other districts have been investigated. The reports were placed in the hands of the Mayor. Policemen have been ordered to watch the saloons and resorts which the Mayor has permitted to remain open conditionally, and more places will probably be closed.

Mayor Harrison did not favor the plan of services in saloons. He said it smacked of the sensational, and was not the right way to reach the debased hearts of the frequenters.

Despite the efforts of the ministers on the West Side and the police to put a stop to crime in Chicago, highway and other robberies and burglaries continued last night and this morning.

EXTENT OF REFORM PLANS.

No apparent movement was made yesterday toward calling together the Committee of Fifteen, and so far as could be learned no call has as yet been made for the first meeting. Visitors at the office of James C Carter are told that Mr. Carter has not yet returned to town, "that we know of," and entire ignorance is expressed of his movements.

Charles Stewart Smith said yesterday that the committee will not be ready for action until it is organized. It is believed that the members are coming to an understanding for organization among themselves.

"I have nothing to say just now," said Mr. Smith. "It must be realized that it takes some time to organize a movement of this kind. It will be found that this will be the most perfectly organized, the most gigantic movement, ever instituted to reform a city."

William H. Baldwin, Jr., who has shown a deep interest in the reform problem, denied emphatically yesterday the rumor that politics has something to do with the delay in getting the committee together. In answer to a question, Mr. Baldwin said that the arrival in town of ex-Senator Hill has no significance as bearing upon the work of the Committee of Fifteen. Mr. Baldwin added that if politics should by any chance creep in, he will not remain a member of the committee.

"There will be no great publicity attending our work," said he, in conclusion. "The very nature of the movement precludes publicity."

CAPT. COONEY GIVES EVIDENCE.

Acting Captain Cooney of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station was called before the Grand Jury yesterday to give testimony concerning the existence in his precinct of a house in which Charles Garey of Brazil was robbed, as alleged, of $3,050 last November by means of the "panel" game.

Evidence as to the existence of the place was given in the complaint of Garey against Emma and Thomas McCarthy for robbing him at 259 West Thirty-ninth Street. The Grand Jury ordered the indictment of the McCarthys, who are now under arrest. Upon Capt. Cooney's testimony indictments were drawn against the persons from whom the McCarthy's rented their apartments. Bench warrants were is sued.

ELEVATED OFFICIALS RESIGN.

George W. Edwards, who has grown up with the Brooklyn Elevated system, resigned his position as General Superintendent yesterday. James W. Norris, Stationmaster, has also resigned.

Mr. Edwards said last night that he was tired of railroading, and was going to rest until Spring. He declared that his relations with President Rossiter and General Manager Brackenridge were harmonious.

Mr. Norris said last night:

"A young man named Robert Fay was recently installed as night train master with higher powers. He boasted of his influence. I have been hounded by him, and put up with it as long as I could. He said he didn't care for General Superintendent or anybody else. He would replace men whom Mr. Edwards assigned to stations, and this was constantly happening at the loop in East New York. He has every station and train man nearly crazy with his orders and counter orders. The whole system is in demoralization. The loop is a failure, and while Mr. Edwards was doing the best he could, Fay began to interfere and added to the confusion."

General Manager Brackenridge said last night that Mr. Edwards had resigned because he could not stand the complaints of the people of East New York regarding the service at the loop. He said there was nothing in the complaints against Fay.

COL. ASTOR BUYS PROPERTY.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Dec. 6.—Col. John Jacob Astor has purchased 100 acres of woodland adjoining Ferncliffe, his country seat at Rhinebeck, from the farms of George Esselstyn and Robert and Cornelius Snyder.

It is said that Col. Astor's motive in buying the land was to save the beautiful trees that cover it from wood-choppers, and he may stock it with game, as the property would make an admirable preserve. The purchase greatly enlarges Col. Astor's holdings in Rhinebeck.

A Correction.

Through an oversight, THE TIMES, in its report of the memorial reunion held at Fraunce's Tavern, printed in Wednesday's issue, said that Mrs. Harriet S. Boas read a brief history of the tavern. The paper in question was read, not by Mrs. Boas, but by Mrs. M. Fay Peirce.

Mr. Hanna's Gift to Cleveland Hospital.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 6.—H. Melville Hanna, a brother of Senator Hanna, has given to the Lakeside Hospital of this city 1,000 shares of Northern Pacific preferred stock, the aggregate par value of which is $100,000. The present market value of the stock is about $82 per share.

CONFERENCE OF REPUBLICANS.

Leaders to Decide on Proposed Police Legislation—Ship Canal May Come Up.

There will be a conference of Republican leaders at the Fifth Avenue Hotel to-night and something definite will probably be done with regard to proposed police legislation.

Senator Thomas C. Platt is coming over from Washington and will meet Governor-elect Odell, Chairman George W. Dunn, George W. Aldridge, Senator John Raines, and others. Ex-Justice W. N. Cohen is expected to submit drafts of his police bills.

Senator Raines will strongly urge the passage of a police bill to apply to all the cities of the State. He considers it a wise measure. Being informed that there was much opposition to a State police bill, Senator Raines said:

"I am aware that there is some opposition to such a scheme. But after such a law is enacted, it will not have been long in operation before two-thirds of those now opposed to it will be in favor of it."

It is probable that the matter of building a ship canal may also be discussed, because Mr. Odell will give a hearing at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon to a Committee of Fifty from the Chamber of Commerce Canal Association of Greater New York and other civic bodies.

These gentlemen will urge upon the Governor-elect the urgent necessity of adopting the report of the special Canal Commission appointed by Gov. Roosevelt, and of which ex-Mayor Charles A. Schieren of Brooklyn was Chairman. The report favors the expenditure of about $62,000,000 in the construction of a ship canal and in other ways improving the artificial waterways of the State.

MR. ODELL'S APPOINTMENT.

Report Says His Military Secretary Will Be H. K. Bird.

The report was current in Republican circles yesterday that Harrison K. Bird of this city will receive the appointment of military secretary to Gov. Odell.

Mr. Bird has long been the private secretary of Mr. F. V. Greene, President of the Republican County Committee, and has the backing of many influential Republicans, including Major Gen. C. F. Roe, Executive Chairman W. H. Ten Eyck, Gen. Greene, George R. Sheldon, and others.

Mr. Bird is a member of the Seventy-first Regiment and during the Spanish war held a commission in the One Hundred and Seventy-first New York Volunteers. Mr. Bird accompanied Commander A. C. Bakewell of Lafayette Post, G. A. R., to Porto Rico to distribute flags among the schools there.

Mr. Bird was born in this city and was graduated from Columbia College in 1896. While there he held the inter-collegiate bicycle record. He was one of the founders of the Automobile Club of America, and is a member of the Union League, New York Athletic, and Ardsley clubs, and the Psi Upsilon fraternity. His only formidable rival for the secretaryship is E. Palmer Gavit of Albany.

W. J. Youngs May Be Pardon Clerk.

ALBANY, Dec. 6.—It was rumored about the Capitol to-day that William J. Youngs, secretary to the Governor, would be appointed Pardon and Requisition Clerk by Governor-elect Odell. The position at present is held by Judge John T. Joyce of Buffalo, who has served in that capacity for a number of years. The salary attached is $3,000.

JOSEPH H. MANLEY'S PLANS.

To Remain in Maine and Have No Federal Appointment.

Joseph H. Manley of Maine is not to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue, although it has been reported that he had accepted the position. Mr. Manley was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night. He said:

"I cannot accept something that has not been offered me. I have not asked for the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and no one in authority has asked me to take it. I will be Speaker of the Maine House of Representatives. My duties will keep me in Maine all Winter.

"The Constitution of the State of Maine strictly forbids any person holding a State office to fill a Federal position at the same time."

COUTANT CASE GOES OVER.

Mr. Slater Says He Believes the Woman Can Be Convicted.

Mrs. Alice F. Coutant of 44 West Twenty-sixth Street, Borough President Grout's stenographer, who is charged by State Senator-elect Samuel S. Slater with attempting to sell information to his political enemies, detrimental to the Senator's character, was not arraigned in Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday. Magistrate Meade adjourned her case until Monday at the request of George Gordon Battle, who said he had been asked by friends of Mrs. Coutant to appear for her. Mrs. Coutant was recommitted to the prison.

Mr. Slater said that the evidence in the case was of a personal nature, involving a score or more of his friends, and would bring upon them unpleasant notoriety if it became public. This evidence, the Senator said, he would endeavor to suppress, although it was, he declared, conclusive against the prisoner. Senator Slater would not deny that the names of Richard Croker and Senator Platt had been mentioned in the case. He had first heard of the matter through Senator Platt, he said.

"I do not believe there was any one behind the woman," he continued. "She approached many persons of political prominence, chiefly Democrats, all of whom referred her to Senator Guy. As any honest man would have done, Senator Guy notified me. I think we have sufficient evidence to obtain a conviction."

Mr. Slater charges that Mrs. Coutant endeavored to sell to his political opponents matters of a confidential nature that she had learned while in the employ of Baldwin & Slater as stenographer and typewriter.

In a communication to THE NEW YORK TIMES, Senator Guy, writing from Atlantic City, says all Democratic leaders approached by Mrs. Coutant, so far as he knows, gave her no encouragement whatever, and declined to have anything to do with her. "I have not authorized the use of Mr. Croker's name in the matter," says the Senator, "and do not believe he ever saw the woman."

GEBHARD'S BARN BURNED.

MINEOLA, L. I., Dec. 6.—The stable of Frederick Gebhard at Westbury was burned last night. It was only by the hardest kind of work by the employes on the place that the stock was saved. Shortly before midnight one of the men discovered smoke coming through the roof of the handsome barn on the premises, and before the alarm could be given flames burst through, and within ten minutes the upper part of the building was a mass of fire.

An alarm was sent to the Westbury Station and to East Williston, which was responded to quickly by the firemen from both places. The employes and others got out the horses and carriages.

All the horses and carriages were saved, but a large quantity of hay and grain was destroyed. The loss is estimated at $7,000.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST.—Cloudy, fresh southwesterly winds.

Since Wednesday night a moderate disturbance has moved southwestward from Assiniboia to Illinois, causing light snow in the northwest and upper lake region and rain in the central valleys. There were also light snows over the lower lake region and northern portions of the Middle Atlantic States and local rains in Eastern Florida. The disturbance in Illinois will move eastward, causing rain in the Ohio and Middle Mississippi Valleys and rain or snow in the lake region, extending to-night and to-morrow into the Middle Atlantic States and New England. It will be colder to-morrow in the Ohio Valley, the Middle Atlantic States and southern and western New England. On the New England and Middle Atlantic Coasts the winds will become fresh southeasterly. On the South Atlantic Coast they will be fresh easterly.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES's thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau is as follows:

LOAN COMPANY IS ACCUSED OF FRAUD

Stockholders' Charges Against Anglo-American Association.

MISMANAGEMENT IS ALLEGED

Complaint Asserts that Dishonesty Has Been Practiced—Denial of Savings Institution Counsel.

The officers and Directors of the Anglo-American Savings and Loan Association will appear before Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court, to-day to make answer to the complaint of several of their stockholders, who ask for a receiver, on the ground that, as the complaint alleges, the affairs of the association have been grossly mismanaged and that actual fraud has been committed.

Charles A. Deshon, the attorney for the association, said yesterday that he would ask for further time in which to prepare a completo answer to the bill of complaint.

"I am glad to see a statement has been made by Mr. Russell," said Mr. Deshon, "that no charge of personal dishonesty against any of the officers or Directors of the association is entertained. The whole matter is one of alleged mismanagement. Whether or not there was mismanagement is subject to proof. The complaint charges that there was mismanagement; we assert that there was not. The court will decide."

Information as to the exact status of the association's affairs was not easily obtained yesterday. At the offices of the company, in the Home Insurance Building, it was said that all information must come through Mr. Deshon, as the association's legal representative. President James and Secretary Gilbert refused to make any statement whatever. When a prospectus of the company was asked for, it was necessary to obtain an order from Mr. Deshon for it before the clerks at the office would give it. Mr. Deshon himself was not inclined to be communicative. He said he did not want to fight his case in the newspapers.

When a call was made at the offices of Russell & Winslow and a member of that firm was asked whether it was true that the honesty of the officers and Directors of the association was not questioned, it was said that the firm had nothing to say in addition to the complaint. An answer to the question put, it was said, could be found in the complaint.

The complaint charges frauds of flagrant character. It sets forth that, in violation of the strict inhibition of the association's charter, the Directors of the company engaged in real estate speculation on an extensive scale; that they adopted a system of securing second mortgages on property on which they already had first mortgages which represented a large percentage of the full value of the property; that such second mortgages, issued by William R. Pearce, an employe of the association, who "was merely selected as a dummy mortgagor," were nothing more than a blind to enable the officers and Directors of the company to carry on their illegal speculative investment schemes, and, finally, that the association paid out to holders of prepaid stock dividends which had never been earned by the company, thereby intrenching upon monthly payment stock.

The association had two kinds of stock, namely, prepaid shares and monthly payment shares. Prepaid shares were sold at $50 per share in advance. On this stock it was provided that dividends earned to the extent of 6 per cent. per annum should be paid from time to time. The payment on each share on the monthly payment stock was in one class 60 cents and on another 30 cents for each month. The prepaid stock of the association, according to the circular of November 20, amounted to $1,546,005, and the installment stock to $774,189.84. The number of shareholders in the association is about 5,000, and they are scattered all over the United States.

Mr. Deshon was seen again later in the day, and, when informed that Russell & Winslow would not authorize any statement that they did not charge dishonesty, but, on the contrary, referred the questioner to the bill of complaint in which such charges were specifically set forth, said:

"Of course the bill of complaint charges dishonesty; that is, dishonesty in a legal sense. It is a dragnet bill, as all such bills are. But there is no charge that the officers or Directors misappropriated the funds of the association. That would be preposterous. The Board contains some of the leading citizens of New York; men whose personal honesty is above question."

Mr. Deshon's attention was called to the specific charges in the bill of complaint. His answer to each one of them was:

"We deny that it is true."

It is claimed by the association's officers that the books of the association will show that whenever dividends on prepaid stock were declared there was a surplus on hand from which such dividends could be paid. Every time dividends of 6 per cent. on prepaid stock were declared, 6 per cent. earnings were also credited to the installment stock. This credit was made in bulk, and the earnings did not show to the credit of the individual shares. This fact occasioned misconstruction and complaint from installment stockholders, but this trouble, it is said, was all adjusted satisfactorily sometime ago.

When Mr. Deshon was asked what was the cause of the association's embarrassment, he would not admit that there was any embarrassment beyond that caused by the filing of the application for receiver. If the association were allowed to transfer its holdings to a real estate association he had no doubt that it would be able to meet its obligations to the stockholders in full.

"What is more," said Mr. Deshon, "most of the shareholders to whom we have made known the plan fully agree with us. We had a letter to-day from the largest stockholder in the association, in which he expressed his approval of the plan proposed, and his belief that it would safeguard every right of the shareholders. In fact, the majority of the responses we have received from shareholders are an indorsement of the scheme. I have no doubt that if I could talk to the shareholders who have made the application for a receiver I could convince them that their interests would be best preserved by the association's plan."

The offices of the association were visited yesterday by a large number of shareholders who came to make inquiries, and many of them to file notices of withdrawal.

FOR ANCILLARY RECEIVER.

Application to Federal Court in Philadelphia—Large Assets There.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 6.—Application was made to-day in the United States Circuit Court for the appointment of an ancillary receiver to take charge of the assets in this district of the Anglo-American Savings and Loan Association in connection with which the filing of a bill in equity by James W. Carpenter, Marion P. Carter, and Pulaski P. Carlin, stockholders, in New York yesterday afternoon, created quite a sensation. The assets in this city are said to be $700,000.

The original bill was filed in Pittsburg, in which district the complainants resided. Then followed the bill in New York, and now the one in this city.

EX-CADET BOOZ BURIED.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Dec. 6.—Oscar L. Booz, the former cadet at West Point Military Academy, who died several days ago from injuries which his parents alleged were the result of hazing at the military school, was buried to-day at Bristol, Penn.

A large crowd viewed the body and heard the services at the Bristol Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Dr. Alexander Allison, pastor of the church, conducted the services. Dr. Allison, who knew young Booz from childhood, extolled the virtues of the former cadet, and said he had no doubt that the young man's untimely death was due to rough treatment at West Point.

Dr. Allison mildly censured the officials of the academy, and said he hoped Congress would not let the matter rest until the affair had been fully investigated.

Bryan Knows Nothing of Federal Party.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 6.—W. J. Bryan said this evening he knew nothing of the movement for the organization of a new political party, announced by Charles M. Walters of Indianapolis. Furthermore, he said he had no knowledge of the coming meeting at Indianapolis. He declined to discuss the mention of his name in connection with the formation of the proposed new party.

TO REDUCE STATE TAXES.

Mr. Odell Announces His Policy to Labor Delegates.

Governor-elect Odell yesterday gave notice that he will oppose the creation of additional offices and that his concern as Chief Magistrate of the State will be to reduce, not to increase, the expenses of the Government. He made the statement in response to an application for a large increase in the number of Deputy State Factory Inspectors.

Moses De Costa and Herman Grossman, representing the Central Federation of Labor, waited on Mr. Odell, at Republican State Headquarters, yesterday afternoon.

"We have called," said Mr. De Costa, "to impress upon you the necessity of doubling the number of Deputy State Factory Inspectors. Our organization has given a great deal of attention to the question of sweat shops, and we feel that for the proper performance of the duties of the State Factory Inspector's department there should be not less than fifty deputies in New York alone, whereas there are only fifty in the entire State.

"The sanitary condition of the sweat shops in this and other large cities is a matter of grave public concern, to which too much importance cannot be attached. There are not enough deputies to keep these shops in a proper sanitary condition.

"There are many defects in the law governing the operation of the department which should be remedied at the next session of the Legislature. Under the present statute persons prepared to violate its provisions are afforded too many loopholes for escape.

"For instance, a woman can secure a license permitting her to carry on work in a tenement. She may secure it for herself or for others. If interfered with by the Inspectors for good and sufficient cause, she can remove to equally squalid and unhealthy quarters in another part of the city and resume business. The law should be amended to prevent a transfer of a license in such cases.

"An amendment should also be adopted making it obligatory on landlords to take out licenses, so that they could be made liable for a misdemeanor in the event of infractions of the law on their premises.

"As an instance of the great dangers to health from overcrowded sweat shops, I want to call your attention to a case discovered at 110 and 112 Mulberry Street. There we found not only ten beds in each of the many rooms used for manufacturing purposes, but there were also swinging beds fastened to the walls. Men, women, and children used them. The rooms were dirty, poorly ventilated, and filled with goods in the process of manufacture. Some of the children were sick."

"It seems to me," replied Mr. Odell, who had listened attentively, "that you are on the wrong track entirely. The present force of Inspectors is ample for the enforcement of the law, and on general principles I am opposed to any increase in the number of Inspectors.

"My first concern after becoming Governor will be to reduce, not to increase, the burdens of taxation. Putting on additional Inspectors would certainly increase expenses.

"The salaries paid by the State Factory Inspectors' Department at the present time amount to more than the cost of collecting the internal revenue of the State. The appropriation, it seems to me, is large enough already."

Mr. Grossman then said:

"The sweat shops spread contagion. Last week I had occasion to visit a sweat shop on the east side and ran across a little tailor who was caring for two children sick with scarlet fever and at the same time sewing on some very expensive cloaks. The house was quarantined and the wife and mother was recovering from illness at the home of a sister. The children were fretful, and the father often had occasion to take the children from the bed and place them on his knees. Sometimes they would sit on the garment he was sewing. There are many similar cases, and there is no doubt that they spread disease, as the germs must necessarily infect the garments."

Mr. Odell repeated his belief that the present force of Inspectors is ample if they do their duty.

After the delegation departed a reporter asked the Governor-elect to outline his policy of reducing expenses. He would not disclose his ideas, but he intimated that the special attorneys now engaged in nearly every branch of the State Government will soon lose their places and the work be done under the supervision of the Attorney General's Department.

MR. CHANLER NOT FOUND.

Dr. Lyon Gives Out Part of the Letter Received from Patient.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Dec. 6.—No trace has been found of John Armstrong Chanler, who escaped from Bloomingdale Asylum on Nov. 28. There is a belief that Chanler may have committed suicide, or else is wandering aimlessly about New York. Dr. Lyon, Superintendent of Bloomingdale Asylum, said to-night:

"The letter he sent to me, and which I received the day following his disappearance, must have been written at the institution previous to his departure, as it is dated 'Macy Villa,' where he had a room. He had very little money, and I don't think his relatives would give him money to go about New York of his own accord." Dr. Lyon said the letter had probably been mulled at the General Post Office. According to Dr. Lyon the letter read, in part, as follows:

Macy Villa, Bloomingdale Asylum,
Nov. 28, 1900.

Dear Doctor: I have gone away for a few days to look after some affairs which I believe need my attention. I expect to return in a few days. This is not a very nice way to leave you, but it is a case of necessity. Please see that my clothes are aired and well taken care of, as I calculate to come back soon.

JOHN H. CHANLER.

HESS GIVES UP LEADERSHIP.

Republicans of the Twenty-fifth District Decline to Accept Resignation.

The Republican Assembly District Committee of the Twenty-fifth Assembly District, at a meeting at 1,146 Broadway last night, rejected, by a vote of 23 to 5, the tendered resignation of Charles A. Hess as leader. Mr. Hess was not present. William Deemer presided and William McEwen acted as Secretary. Col. Lovell H. Jerome offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of the committee and of the Republicans of the Twenty-fifth Assembly District are due to Charles A. Hess, our leader, for the magnificent majority attained for the entire Republican ticket at the recent election and we commend his earnest work, contributed so unselfishly in behalf of the Republican cause.

Col. Jerome then tendered the resignation of Mr. Hess as leader.

In a moment half a dozen men were on the floor seeking recognition from the chair, and insisting that the resignation must not be accepted, and it was noticeable that among these were Samuel Morris and one other man who in the early part of the last campaign had opposed Mr. Hess.

Remarks very laudatory of Leader Hess were made by several members of the committee, and then the following resolution was offered:

Resolved, That the resignation of Charles A. Hess be rejected for the reason that we desire to have him continue as Chairman of the committee and as leader of the district, and it is our earnest wish that Mr. Hess will consent to continue to serve in the capacity of leader.

A motion to table the resolution until after the annual meeting of the County Committee on Dec. 20 was almost unanimously defeated.

Then the original resolution was adopted —23 to 5. There has been some talk that Henry Hirrell would succeed Mr. Hess as leader. The latter said last night that he would abide by the wishes of the people of his district. The opinion prevails among politicians that Mr. Hess will continue as leader.

ANTI-GATES MOVEMENT

Effort to Oust Him from Steel and Wire Trust May Succeed.

Proxies, Mr. Welles Says, Are Arriving from All Over the Country as Well as from Wall Street.

The movement which has for its stated object the ousting of John W. Gates from the active management of the American Steel and Wire Company is gaining force and headway. Welles, Herrick & Hicks, who at the request of certain stockholders instituted the proceedings, advertising for proxies to enable them to vote at the annual meeting for an "honest and efficient management," stated yesterday that their request was meeting with entirely satisfactory and gratifying results. Proxies in fairly considerable numbers have already come in and there is, it is said, every expectation that they will continue steadily to be received. Charles E. Welles, the head of the firm, declares that they come from all parts of the country, as well as from Wall Street.

"The movement," he yesterday remarked, "is directed principally and primarily against Mr. Gates—that you can say without hesitation. He is objectionable personally to the shareholders whom we represent, and his methods also are objected to. Something like a year ago he came to Wall Street and with a great flourish and much ado put the common stock of the company on a 7 per cent. dividend basis, declaring at the time that business was never so good, the outlook never so promising. Some months later he, as Chairman of the board of the company, suddenly ordered many of the company's mills closed, declaring that business was poor, thereby precipitating nothing short of a panic. His methods, in fact, were altogether suggestive of stock manipulation, rather than of honest management and care for the company's legitimate business. Since then affairs in the compahy have not been by any means satisfactory, and hence the present move.

"I am glad to say that we have already received many proxies and much encouragement, both from Wall Street interests and from outside the city. Inasmuch as the annual meeting is not held until Feb. 21, we have great hopes that our efforts will be successful.

"I do not care to disclose the names of our principals. I see that some of the newspapers say Standard Oil interests are back of the movement, but beyond the fact that sometimes we act for Standard Oil people, I do not know that there is any justification for the report."

At the offices of the Steel and Wire Company none of the officials will discuss the matter. It is stated there that Mr. Gates is expected to arrive in the city Sunday night to attend a meeting of the Directors on Monday, when it is understood the last quarterly installment of 1¾ per cent. on the common stock—making the full 7 per cent. for the year—will be ordered paid. A plan of action may then be decided upon in respect to the common stock dividend for the ensuing year.

From Chicago a Director of the company was yesterday quoted as saying that even if sufficient proxies to assume control are obtained it will "be impossible to elect an entire new Board of Directors, as, according to the by-laws, only one-third of the Directors retire each year at the annual meeting. There are fifteen Directors altogether, and there will be five to elect at the meeting in February."

RUMORS IN CHICAGO.

Some of Mr. Gates's Associates Said to be Short of Common Stock

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 6.—Judging from rumors and reports on Lasalle Street, this morning, the fight at the next annual meeting of the American Steel and Wire Company against John W. Gates and his associates on the Directory will be exceedingly bitter. Not only are the New Yorkers after the plunger's scalp, but they want those of Lambert, Drake, and Ellwood also.

It is charged that the stock has been made a football and a plaything of the Chicago clique. The leaders are largely interested in the preferred shares, and have carried on their speculation largely in the common shares. One of the youngest of the quartet is alleged to be short 13,000 shares of the common, and others of the Western contingent are also on the short side of the market.

According to excellent authority, the earnings for the fiscal year will show nearly 22 per cent. A stockholder, well posted, said:

"The common shares have paid a 7 per cent. dividend, and are selling at $43 a share, while the preferred, paying the same annual distribution, is selling at $92. Isn't it a commentary on the management that a 7 per cent. stock should be selling around $43 a share? We believe it is an expression of the investment public's lack of confidence in the present management, and therefore we want to change it, throw out the crowd of plungers, and elect conservative men in their places."

A DEFENSE OF MR. GATES.

Good Man and Has Done His Work Well, Thomas Dolan Says.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 6.—President Thomas Dolan of the United States Gas Improvement Company this afternoon emphatically denied the statement that the Rockefellers and the Whitney syndicate have combined to oust John W. Gates from the Presidency of the American Steel and Wire Company.

"It is absurd; absolutely false," said Mr. Dolan. "There is not a bit of truth in the entire story. We have nothing but the best of feeling for Mr. Gates, and no such combine has even been thought of. It is simply a story for Street purposes, and was put out to boom the stock. Such schemes have been worked before, and several of them have proved successful.

"Mr. Gates is a good man, and he has fulfilled the duties of his office in a satisfactory manner, and there is no reason why he should be dethroned."

SPRAGUE COLLECTION SALE.

Interest in an Ancient Hebrew Scroll of the Law—An Innovation of the Auctioneer.

The sale of the collection of the Japanese and other art objects which belonged to the late Joseph W. Sprague of Louisville, Ky., was continued at the galleries of the American Art Association yesterday afternoon. The objects disposed of consisted of Oriental silverware, Japanese sword guards, arms, and ivories, and miscellaneous specimens, mostly of cabinet size. A large collection of photographs was disposed of at the close of the sale.

With regard to the last named item, the auctioneer, Thomas E. Kirby, introduced an innovation. The photographs were in thirty-five lots, each lot in a case, and consisting of views more or less related to each other. There were between 50 and 150 photographs in each lot. When the first lot of photographs was reached Mr. Kirby announced that the bidding would be on each separate photograph, and that the buyer of the lot, consisting of eighty-five views, would have the privilege of taking all the photographs in the Sprague collection. The bidding was started at 10 cents. A dealer bid 12½ cents, and secured the lot. He decided that he would take all the remaining lots.

As some of those present at the sale had gone there with the express purpose of bidding on one or more of the lots of photographs, which included a number of rare views of scenery and architecture of considerable value, there was a good deal of discussion about the manner in which the collection had been disposed of. It was even questioned whether an auctioneer has the right, after he has catalogued a collection in lots, to sell the entire collection at once. Mr. Kirby has frequently sold two lots together at previous sales, but he has usually stated that he would do so, "if nobody in the room objects."

For the generality of the articles sold yesterday prices regarded as extremely good were realized. One of the most interesting objects offered was an ancient Hebrew Scroll of the Law. It is written on leather prepared according to the directions of Maimonides, the physician of Saladin, and was used by the Yemen Jews in their synagogue in Southern Arabia. It was knocked down to Mr. Bishop for $210. A rock crystal ball 2¾ inches in diameter, on a bronze stand, was sold to the same buyer for $117, and a Daimio warrior's bow, with arrow holder and fifteen arrows, went for $50.

This afternoon Japanese lacquers will be sold, and to-morrow the extraordinary carved furniture, the distinctive feature of the collection, will be disposed of.

MOLASSES IN NEW ORLEANS.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 6.—Molasses men here make no attempt to conceal the fact that nearly every gallon of molasses that leaves this port is adulterated, and when questioned regarding the proposed action to be taken by the New York Board of Health they dismiss the subject with, "Oh, well, we only give the people what they want."

So far nothing definite has been done to stop the practice of adulteration here, and, in fact, ever since the attempt made by the Board of Health in 1898 to get behind the adulterators of molasses little has been done to enforce the pure food laws.

The law against selling unmarked adulterated molasses in Louisiana fixes the punishment at imprisonment not to exceed six months and a fine not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 for each offense. The present agitation here for the pure article will hardly amount to anything. The residents of New Orleans have long since quit using it, and to-day unadulterated molasses cannot be purchased in more than two or three retail stores in the city.

Yesterday one well-known citizen spent almost the entire day looking for a gallon of pure sugar house molasses and failed to find it, and had finally to send to a plantation for it.

BANQUET OF THE ST. NICHOLAS SOCIETY

Elaborate Decorations, Souvenirs, and Other Features.

TWAIN'S VIEW OF NEW YORK

A full representation of the membership of the St. Nicholas Society assembled for the sixty-sixth annual banquet, held last night at Delmonico's. The function was attended by all the quaint Old World glitter and pomp that has characterized the banquets of the society in the past, and upward of 300 members and guests in song and oratory honored the traditions of their ancestry of Holland.

The decorations of the hall as well as the wealth of unique souvenirs distributed among the diners were suggestive of the Netherlands. Broad streamers of orange swung from the big central chandelier to the walls of the banquet hall. The table decorations were of the same color. The long guests' table was spread with a cloth of orange hue and was draped with smilax.

Above the President's chair were draped four immense American flags about the shield of the society. In addition to the regular corps of waiters were scattered about the dining hall ebon-hued servitors dressed in the uniform of a Court page of the House of Orange.

Chief among the dinner souvenirs were Holland beer mugs, upon which appeared the coat of arms of Holland and pictures of New Amsterdam in 1650, and of the present City of New York. The lids were of silver. The mugs were made in Holland for the occasion.

Among the prominent members and guests at the small tables were Henry S. E. Davies, L. C. Deming, Bayard Domlick, Col. De L. Floyd-Jones, Austin G. Fox, Prof. Frank Goodnow, Dr. W. Tod Helmuth, Frederick A. Juilliard, ex-Surrogate Rollin M. Morgan, J. Rutgers Planten, Consul General from the Netherlands; Philip Rhinelander, R. B. Roosevelt, John H. Starin, Paul G. Thebaud, A. Cortlandt Van Rensselaer, John W. Vrooman, Evert Jansen Wendell, Prof. Barret Wendell, and Cornelius B. Zabriskie.

It was late in the evening when the first lull came in the hum of the banquet hall, and Toastmaster Foster, dressed in his sash and headgear of office, greeted the procession of standard bearers and pages and started the speech-making by saying that the past year had been a feast of plenty for the society.

He said the society had given the State a Governor and the country a Vice President. He referred to Gov. Roosevelt as a Hollander of the truest type.

In the midst of a selection by the boy choir of Grace Church, Mark Twain entered the banquet hall in custody of a committee who had been sent in a cab to seek him out at his home, he having delayed to put in an appearance at the banquet. The humorist, limping a little from the effects of a rheumatic attack, was led up to the guest table, where the diners arose and gave him long-continued applause.

DR. MACKAY FOUND MANY SAINTS.

The first toast of the evening, "St. Nicholas," was responded to by Dr. Mackay, who said that after being invited to speak at the dinner he had looked up a religious encyclopedia to find which St. Nicholas he was to honor, for a minister of New York had his hands so full with sinners that he had precious little time to cultivate the acquaintance of saints.

"I found thirty-one worthies bearing the name of St. Nicholas," said the speaker, "so I called up a member of this society and asked him which St. Nicholas I was to speak about.

"'Oh, any old saint will do,' he replied. [Laughter.] I finally found the one I wanted, however, and I always liked him for his rich, full-blooded, genial humanity, and I do not imagine that we could do better to-day than perpetuate by precept just that type of genial, sunshiny religion which he stands for. Religion has suffered more from gloom than from heresy.

"Emaciation of body does not of necessity mean fatness of soul. That, I think, with all its magnificent features, was the distinctive weakness of New England Puritanism in contrast to the broad and more tolerant religion of New Amsterdam. The Puritan made temperament rather than character the test of religion.

"So the man with the longest face became the typical saint. It is against this mawkish type of religion that is perpetually congratulating itself, not on the good things it ought to do, but on the wicked things it doesn't do, that in the name of St. Nicholas I want to protest to-night.

"There is gospel in a smile, and in my opinion a man like Mark Twain is as much a preacher of righteousness in this world to-day as any consecrated Bishop, priest, or minister. [Cheers.]

"Of course by this I don't mean to go to the other extreme in our genial religion, but St. Nicholas stands in history, not only for genial religion, but for practical religion. I don't think he was famous for any theological treatises he ever wrote, but if his religion was not strong in doctrine, it was strong in practice.

"He stands as a type of man to whom the doing of God's will is more important than his belief in a human creed. The religion the world wants to-day is a religion like that of St. Nicholas, that lays hands of brotherly love upon the crying needs of our helpless brethren."

THE CITY AS MARK TWAIN SEES IT.

When Mark Twain arose to respond to the toast "Our City," he was cheered for fully five minutes.

"These are prosperous days for me," he said. "Night before last Bishop Potter complimented me and thanked me for my contributions to theology. [Laughter.] To-night Dr. Mackay has elected me to the priesthood. [Laughter.] I thank both these gentlemen for discovering things in me which I had long before discovered, but which I had begun to fear the world at large would never find out. [Laughter.]

"Returning to New York after an absence of nine years, I find much improvement in it—a great moral improvement. Some think it is because I have been away, [laughter,] but the more intelligent think that it is because I have come back. [Laughter.] But we'll not discuss that. Let's get down to the business end of this toast—our city.

"We take stock of a city like we take stock of a man. The clothes and appearance are the externals by which we judge. We next take stock of the mind, the intellect. These are the internals. The sum of both is the man or the city. New York has a great many details of the external sort which impress and inform the foreigner. Among these are the sky-scrapers, and they are new to him. He hasn't seen their like since the Tower of Babel. He is shocked. I am not.

"As seen by daylight these skyscrapers make the city look ugly. Too chimney-like—like a mouth full of snags. Like a cemetery with all monuments and no gravestones. But at night, when the great walls of masonry are all a-sparkle, the city is fairly-like. It is more beautiful than any other city since the days of the Arabian nights. When the disgruntled foreigner has exhausted his objections by day, let us float him down the river by night.

"Certainly the sky-scraper has its advantages, and we don't need to apologize for it. Then we have elevators in them that elevate—not like the cigar boxes of Europe called 'lifts.' The European lift is always stopping to reflect. That's well enough in a horse horse, but not in an elevator. [Laughter.]

"In Europe, when a man starts to the sixth floor on a lift he often photographs his family so he may recognize them when he gets back. [Laughter.] Then look at our cable and trolley and elevated cars. They are the cleanest, simplest, most comfortable in the world, and all of them were created and conferred upon us by the New York hackman. [Laughter.] He did it, and we ought always to be grateful to him. We have a custom of erecting monuments to our benefactors. We owe him one. Not a permanent one, maybe. We might build it of plaster, and, after gazing upon it for a while, tear it down."

The reference to the Dewey Arch was quickly perceived and applauded by the audience.

The speaker then went on to describe the London bus and underground roads.

"You can get no one to believe that you rode on a London underground road," said he, "unless you have a cinder in your eye, and, as for the busses, some find it cheaper to ride on a London bus than to pay board. [Laughter.]

"New York is also cleaner than it used to be. It is cleaner than Bombay. But I'm not here to flatter Bombay." [Laughter.]

When the speaker got around to what he referred to as the internal characteristics of the city he lapsed into sarcasm of the most biting sort, interrupted frequently by applause.

"By the municipal government of a city," he said, "a foreigner distinguishes its character. He sees now that you have the best municipal Government that the world has ever seen. The purest, the most fragrant. The angels in heaven must envy you. You got it by your noble fidelity to civic duty, by your stern and watchful exercise of the powers conferred upon you with your citizenship. You got it by your manly refusal to sit quiet while men made high places and took them.

"You have made the city the envy of the world, and when you enter the gates of heaven the angels will say, 'Here they come. The citizens who saw their civic duty and did it. Turn on the limelight.'"

Baron Gevers, in responding to the toast "Holland and the Founders of New Amsterdam," referred to the friendship that had always existed between America and the Netherlands. "Now, when we are next-door neighbors in the Far East," said he, "there is reason why those ties that have always bound us should be drawn closer." [Cheers.]

Other toasts were drunk and responded to as follows: "Our Country," the Rev. J. Lewis Parker; "The Army," Gen. Brooke; "The Navy," Rear Admiral Barker; "The Close of the Nineteenth Century," ex-Judge Henry E. Howland.

BUYS ESTATE IN FLORIDA.

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Dec. 6.—The most important sale of real estate for several years has just been consummated in the purchase of the Phares estate by Charles Haines of New York.

The location of this place on the south side of Lake Harris, upon a bluff twenty feet high, overlooking a magnificent body of water, with its stately groups of native palmettoes, combine to make it as charming a situation as can be found in the State.

Mr. Haines has a full force of hands at work on the grounds. The old Colonial house will be repaired, and he will soon enjoy the comforts of an ideal Florida home. There are more than 1,000 acres in the purchase, and while the price is not stated, it is said to be the largest transfer in the Yalaha section for many years.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6.—At the Fat Stock Show to-day Schwarzschild & Sulzberger of New York bought B. R. Pierce's Aberdeen Angus steer Advance for $1.50 a pound. This was paid for beef on the hoof, and as the steer tipped the scale at 1,430 pounds the price was $2,145.

That's why these splendid goods are offered to you at barely more than a third of their value.

They are full 51 inches wide, in nineteen rich and attractive color combinations. Some fancy plaids, others Scotch Tartans, and still others in camel's-hair plaids. The choosing won't last long at this price—

Table Decorations — Candy Boxes

CANDIES

The Christmas table, the Christmas tree, the Christmas gift—all depend for daintiness and finish on the pretty things that our candy man has brought from over the ocean. And America depends on Wanamaker's. Did you know that?

No other store in America—no other place in the world—collects such a wonderful variety of table decorations and candy boxes as are gathered here. And the cost is small, though they add vastly to the appearance of the table and the dainty effect of the gift of candy.

Then you want the new things—different from the ordinary sorts that the usual store offers—original in design and most tasteful and beautiful. These are to be found only at Wanamaker's. Our candy man designs and suggests most of the pieces, that is partly why.

Here is a suggestive list of table decorations and candy holders:

Fancy Candy Boxes—Drums, 5c, 10c, 15c, 20c and 25c. Dress Suit Cases, 15c and 25c. Kodaks, 10c and 25c. Grips, 10c, 15c, 20c and 25c. Trunks, 10c and 25c. Sailor Hats, 10c, 20c and 35c. Dolls, 10c, 25c, 30c, 50c, 75c and $1.

Fancy Boxes, round, square, oblong, and all other fancy shapes, 3c to $35 each.

Snapping Mottoes, French, English and German. Some contain jewels, toys and puzzles. 8c to $4 a dozen.

Chocolate Novelties—Cigars, Pipes, Cigarettes, Smoking Sets, Tea Sets, Alphabet, Champagne Bottles, Bells, Turtles, Bicycles, Horses, Dogs, Cats, Elephants, Lions, Bears, Tigers, 5c to $11 each. Various fancy packages, 5c and 10c each.

But the Candies themselves, are most important. There is no factory in the world that can make such an enormous daily supply of fine, pure Candies as ours. Nowhere will Christmas Candies be so lately fresh from the factory as here.

The best Bonbons and Chocolates that purest, finest materials and most expert skill can make, at 60c a pound. You can get no better anywhere at any price.

Chocolates and Bonbons, just as fresh and pure, but made of the less expensive materials, at 30c a pound.

Mixed Chocolates, Chocolate-covered Marshmallows and Nougat, 5 pounds for $1, or 20c a pound.

Candies for Christmas festivals, in 25-pound lots, at 16c, 18c and 20c a pound. With these we give without extra charge pretty little boxes showing Santa Claus entering a cottage in which children are dreaming of him.

French Glace Fruit, box of 5 pounds for $1.50.

Several hundred different varieties of candies are here to choose from—the largest collection gathered in any store anywhere—and nothing but purest, cleanest, wholesome candies all the way through.

Beautiful Objects of Art

Another influx of beauty lends new attractiveness to the Basement Art Store. Guided by the admirable judgment of our connoisseur all Europe and America have contributed generously to the collection of beautiful things which welcomes your critical inspecting. From the elaborately handsome electroliers, vases and pedestals, to the strangely shaped, graceful pottery in l'Art Nouveau, with its lustrous rainbow hues, and the exquisite little bronzes, the Art Room teems with interest for the lover of the beautiful. But the place of honor belongs to-day to the new accessions to the already extensive collection of Italian pottery, Ghouda Ware, Castilena Marbles, Limoges and Italian Faience, of which more particular mention follows:

Italian Pottery. A new arrival of this striking ware, with its characteristically florid figure designs in blues, greens and yellows, which suggest Majolica. In urns, vases, pitchers and plaques. $6 to $27.50.

Ghouda Ware. A second quantity of this superb Holland pottery, made necessary by the gaps your appreciation has made in the first lot. There are vases, urns, pitchers, jardinieres, candlesticks and ferneries, in graceful shapes, which harmonize with the broadly treated scroll work and conventionalized flowers, in deep rich greens, purples and blues. 50c to $40.

Marbles. Some beautiful pieces of Castilena marble reached us yesterday. The ease with which this pure white marble can be worked makes the most delicate effects possible. There are some charming busts and figures of fanciful subjects, of exquisite workmanship, among these new arrivals. $7 to $150.

Limoges Enamels. These are beautifully decorated little vases, jars and cups, enameled on copper. The body of the pieces is in rich shades of deep rose, enclosing medallions which contain dainty Louis XV. figures. $4 to $20.

German Plaques. Square and oblong titles, with figures in raised outlines, strikingly colored, with or without frames of dark wood. $1 to $4.

White Italian Faience. Groups of statuary, or single figures—very effective parlor ornaments. A particularly handsome piece, full of action, represents Neptune in his car drawn by sea-horses, and accompanied by Tritons and Nereids. $17.50. Others $1.85.

Pedestals, in white and green marble, $7.50 to $35; in onyx, $38 to $160.

Gold JEWELRY

Here is a resplendent gathering of rich and beautiful stones, mounted in every form of jewelry beauty. Our jewelry chief has searched the markets of Europe and America in bringing this collection together. London, Paris, New York, have nothing of true artistic worth and beauty that is not represented here.

We have gone to the best, and all the best makers on both sides of the ocean. For originality and variety of designs shown there are few equal showings anywhere; and where jewelry of some intrinsic and artistic worth is shown, prices are universally higher. We give below a hint of the sorts and prices of artistic Gold Jewelry made on this side of the ocean.

BICYCLES

The new Orient Bicycles for 1901 are here—hurried from the factory to meet the wishes of those who want to "hang" the new bicycle on the Christmas tree. And the Orients are decidedly new. The makers call them "Tailored," because they are to be fitted to each particular rider.

Long cranks, high gears, small drop, are the features for 1901.

The varying crank lengths make it necessary to fit crank and frame to each rider. The long, slow, easy swing of the new-style wheel is said to be delightful. The 1901 Orient has the new idea to perfection. Price, $50.

All 1900 Orients Reduced To-day!

Only about fifty left, and they are likely to go in a jiffy at the new prices:

Orient Light Roadsters, were $50; now $35— Men's 20 and 22-inch; women's 20-inch.

Juvenile Rodman Bicycles: 20-inch wheels, boys' and girls', $17.50. 24-inch wheels, boys' and girls', $20. 26-inch wheels, boys' and girls', $22.50.

The TOY STORE

"Through the Tunnel to Toyland"—don't forget the direction—you can come in at Broadway, or on Ninth street; but you enjoy best the burst of life and jollity, if you come, and bring the children through the Subway under Ninth street, from the Basement of the Main store. There's something doing all over these five stores that make this the One greatest Toy exhibition in New York. Games are being played, to show you and the children how. Here they are "blowing bubbles," with a man in them! (10c); at another place they are blowing another kind of "bubbles." (25c).

A practical graphophone is shown for $1. It speaks for itself. The Prismatic Top delights the little folks, 25c. Also the Reversible Top, that winds itself, 10c.

Stratton's Wonderful Building Blocks, that can be built into so many remarkable things, are being put together to show how. $1 a set.

Richter's Stone Building Blocks, are entirely different—any architectural design. 20c to $48 a set.

Simplex Typewriters are shown working, $1 to $5.

Then the Elevated Railroad, with the up-hill grade, is being climbed by engines, automobiles and trolley cars. $1 each.

Lots of fun for young and old—and the jolliest lot of Christmas things you ever saw.

Men's Neckwear

This Men's Furnishing Store of ours holds a unique position among furnishers generally. One distinguishing feature is its way of gathering certain things to itself alone. That's more appreciated each succeeding season. Men are growing more like women—like to have styles that they won't run against everywhere they go.

Take the matter of neckwear. The man who gathers these stocks is a student of style, an originator. His ideas, and those of the best makers at home and abroad, find expression in ties to be found here and nowhere else. They find instant approval, too, from correct dressers generally.

A better-than-ever display awaits you now. Gift-seekers will find it to their advantage to view it. For there's another distinguishing feature—prices. We're lower than the exclusive dealer in men's wear.

50c to $2.50 for ready-made neckwear. We'll make scarfs to order of silks from the best English and French looms, in the most tasteful designs and color combinations, at $1.75 to $5.

News of SHOES

The Christmas thought pervades the Main Store's stocks—Slippers! Comfortable foot-wear for home use—for men, women and children of all ages—a wonderful variety of newest, most tasteful styles. And leggings, too. Sell many of them 'round this time. Especially for the children. Pretty styles for the little ones, in red and blue and black.

Down-stairs the bargains for women and children. A couple of sample values:

$2—Women's black kidskin boots, with the stylish full toe. They are welted and stitched; all sizes. Saving of $1 and more.

$1.40—Women's black kidskin buttoned and laced shoes; tipped nicely with patent leather and kid; all sizes. The usual $2.50 grade.

The bargain shoes for men and boys are across the way—Fourth avenue and Ninth street. There's a wide collection of exceptionally good values there now. You may judge how good by these few examples:

At $1.50, from $2.50—Still more of those good black calf shoes for men; heavy soles; broad toes; just right for present use.

Boys' Shoes, $1.25; value $2.50—Of sound and solid calfskin; heavy soles, sewed on; sizes 11 to 5.

Women's Jackets

There are about 250 of them, in all, in the handsomest and most approved of the season's styles. But there are only a few of each sort, so the stock was, without favor or discrimination, marked for speedy disappearance at though values run up to $22.50. Reason—it's getting late for selling jackets, while wearing-time is at its height. These jackets we know about—they are taken from our regular stock, and we are sure of the excellence of the design, material, and workmanship that enter into their making. Colors are mostly black, Oxford and tan, materials are kersey, boucle, Melton and cheviot, with taffeta or satin linings. All sizes are represented, though not in each kind. Here are three specimens of the offering:

Men's Bath Robes

Now, there's a very suitable gift for husband or brother or father—a comfortable well-made bath robe. Most likely to be very acceptable. We'll help you to a satisfactory selection. The assortment comprises many most desirable styles.

Say one of these Terry cloth robes with hood or sailor collar—washable. They're in seven qualities, at $3 to $12.

Or one of eiderdown, made by the same firm that makes the cloth—the best domestic eiderdown to be had. These are $3.50 to $8.

Blanket Robes from our own factory, with Raglan sleeves, are very swell and luxurious. $3.75 to $10.

Men's SUITS

A number of small lots are re-marked at a very small price. They are all in the latest cut—the material all in the newest and best-liked patterns. That's why these became small lots so soon. The new popular broad-shouldered military sack coat will be found in many of these suits. There are values in this new grouping up to $20—good values at $20. Some of the suits were $15—very moderately priced at that figure. Choice now of this excellent collection at Twelve Dollars a Suit.

Flannel Waists

Particular mention of a new lot of a recent popular style. These arrived here only on yesterday,—just in time. They are in cardinal, navy blue, lavender and black. Prettily made with plaited full front, and French back, the sleeves in dress fashion, with pointed ends; polished steel buttons. Attractive in appearance—no less so in price. They're $1.50 each.

Numerous other grades and styles up to $7.50. We'll put your choice up in a neat box, suitable for a present, if you wish.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

May Irwin Tries a New Variety Farce at the Bijou Theatre.

A Taking New Song in "Madge Smith, Attorney"—A New German Comedy —Gossip of the Stage.

In the second act of the new piece called "Madge Smith, Attorney," which had a trial performance at the Bijou Theatre yesterday afternoon, a general simulation of light-hearted mirth on the stage proved contagious in the audience, and some new songs, sung with spirit by gleesome May Irwin, Ignacio Martinetti, and Joseph Sparks, turned out to be uncommonly effective. Two of Miss Irwin's songs in this division of the play, especially, deserve praise. They are "When I'm by Your Side," with a bouche fermée refrain, and a new darky ditty called "My Congo Queen." This last mentioned is commonplace enough, both in tune and words, but it is at least alive, and will soon be whistled everywhere. The refrain has the right swing and is very taking in its simple way:

She's my little Congo Queen,
A lady quite sublime,
Her pedigree and her family tree,
Date back to Adam's time,
Where the Congo River flows,
Through the jungle cool and green;
Some day I'll claim that royal dame,
My little Congo Queen.

Martinetti's imitation French song is clever, too, while Sparks has a preposterous one about an Irish-American, who insisted on having the turkey he had won in a raffle occupy a seat by his side in an electric car.

These divertissements and a bit of a dance occurred in a scene imitating a frolicsome breakfast party in which "men-about-town" and chorus girls were the guests of a woman lawyer, while the further development of the silly plot led to an embroglio in a police court, where the aforesaid legal female was accidently employed to convict her own husband of assault and battery.

"Madge Smith, Attorney," is not an ingenious or well-planned farce, and is, as a whole, a very poor specimen of its own poor kind. The author's idea of wit leads him to such bits of pleasantry as these:

"I'll take a chair."

"Dont take it too far."

"Your conduct shall be checked.

"You ought to be checked in the coat-room."

"I have a sudden palpitation of the heart."

"Take some whisky."

"No. I'm used to it."

"I know you are, but it will do you good."

Drunkenness and martial infidelity, treated in the dreary old manner of the departed minstrel jokes, and the supposedly comic draughtsman, seem to be cheap stuff to offer for the entertainment of New York theatregoers in this lively and uncommonly productive season, when competition is so keen. There is very little wit in this farce, and not a gleam of dramatic aptitude or invention. The talk about garters has had no equal in stupidity on our stage lately, except in the talk about Plato in the "Sprightly" piece at the Theatre Republic.

But it must be admitted that the theatre was full yesterday of amiable folks, with hearts of wax and hands of iron, and that there was plenty of applause and laughter, and that, although Miss Irwin's best efforts could not make the dilogue light or the plot amusing, she found ample play for her natural gayety and her comic talent in the divertissements which were deferred too long, but were good when they came.

IRVING PLACE THEATRE.

"Rosenmontag," a five-act play by Otto Erich Hartleben, which made its first appearance at the Irving Place Theatre last evening, would have been a very poor play not to have been in a measure successful, for its cast included nearly every man in Herr Conried's company, and the one woman who appeared was his clever leading lady of this season, Hedwig Lange. The play is a peculiar one. It is scheduled on the bill as an "Offiziersgeschichte," an army story.

A young army officer, Hans Rudorff, (Adolph Zimmerman,) has for a year been infatuated with the daughter of a mechanic, Gertrod Reimann, (Hedwig Lange.) To cure this passion, which will prove fatal to his prospects, two of his cousins in the same regiment put the girl in a false position. Hans believes she is untrue to him, and becomes engaged to the daughter of a wealthy merchant. The plot is discovered, the young officer is reconciled to his first love, who is found in his rooms, and his disgrace is followed by his suicide in the last act, with Gertrud, who begs to share his fate. The tragedy occurs on Rosenmontag, the young officer's wedding day.

The value of handsome uniforms and military music as accessories is seen in the first two acts, in which the first part of the story is developed. There is an attractive scene when Hans's future father-in-law is ushered into his room by his fellow officers and part of a military band, including a big bass drum.

The officers carry paper lanterns on long poles. It is unfortunate that the story will not admit another appearance of Augustus Schmitz. Max Hanseler, for he was a model of a comfortable and agreeable father-in-law, and the little address he makes to the young officers proved him to be a thoroughly good fellow.

Adolf Hoffmann is usually cast for the handsome hero of a play, and he wears a becoming uniform with distinction. He did some good work last night. In the first acts he had more the appearance of a young man enjoying his good clothes than of a youth with a secret sorrow. Hedwig Lange is always satisfying and a favorite with the audience. Otto Gebert took the part of Harold Hoffmann, a wise friend of the young officer. The scene shifters were in need of a few more rehearsals last evening, and the players in some of the minor parts will have to look through their roles again.

MISS NETHERSOLE A WITNESS.

Testifies Before Referee in Marcus Mayer's Suit for Commissions.

Olga Nethersole, the actress and her brother Louis were under examination yesterday before Francis C. Cantine, referee in the action brought by Marcus Mayer, who was Miss Nethersole's manager during the production of the play of "Sapho" last season. Mr. Mayer claims that about $17,000 is due him in commissions. The hearing yesterday was mainly as to items of expenses, Mr. Mayer claiming that the money spent was not for the business of the company.

The items objected to were all small, and included "New Year's greeting at Providence," "Christmas cards at Baltimore," "Mrs. Mallon's funeral wreath," "Dinner to 'Sapho' trial witnesses," also Miss Nethersole's meals on the stage, for massage treatment, theatre tickets, carriage hire, cables, and a floral tribute to Fanny Davenport.

After several lively tilts between the lawyers, Miss Nethersole's counsel decided to deduct about $1,000 from the expenses she had charged. This deduction was for meals and money given to charities. Louis Nethersole, as Treasurer of the "Sapho" company, testified that the receipts for the first season, when Mr. Mayer was with the company, were $102,357.59, and the total disbursements $91,855.24, and the receipts for the second season $141,868.65, with proportions to expenses.

Miss Nethersole in her testimony said that under the contract she was to receive the first $20,000 profits, and that Mr. Mayer had not objected to the cost of the production of the plays being considered a business expense. The hearing will be continued at 10:30 o'clock this morning.

Grace George Convalescent.

Miss Grace George, who was compelled to abandon the performance last Tuesday night at Poughkeepsie of "Her Majesty" on account of a severe sore throat, has recovered so that she will be enabled to resume her tour Monday night, when she will present the play at Norwich, Hartford Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday; New Britain, Friday, Bridgeport Saturday, and then for one week, beginning Dec. 17, at the Columbia Theatre in Brooklyn.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Ernst Van Dyck, the tenor, who has been singing on the Pacific Coast with the Maurice Grau Opera Company, returned to this city yesterday. He will make his first appearance in this city Wednesday night, Dec. 10, as Tannhauser. Another member of the company who will arrive some time to-day is M. Saleza.

The executors of the estate of Augustine Daly received yesterday a cable message from London informing them that a decision had been rendered by the Court of Appeals in their suit against George Edwardes for the possession of Daly's Theatre in London. This decision affirms the judgment against Edwardes and in favor of the Daly estate.

The benefit performance given at the New York Theatre for the widow and children of Joe Ott resulted in $2,000 being received, which included a check from the White Rat organization of $1,000 and another for the same amount, contributed by the Sire Brothers. Another benefit performance for the same cause will be given this afternoon, when a new drama by John C. Dixon, entitled "Sold and Paid For," will be given for the first time.

KESSEL LOSES HIS CASE.

Injunction Restraining the Police Is Dissolved.

The injunction restraining the police of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station from interfering with Plaza Hall, at 313 West Fifty-ninth Street, was dissolved yesterday by Justice Leventritt in the Supreme Court, the Justice declaring that the extraordinary right of injunction should not be used to protect a business where there is any doubt about that business being in violation of the laws of the State.

The temporary injunction was obtained on Tuesday by Adam Kessel, Jr., who had taken out an excise license for the place, made famous from the fact that it was supposed that "Billy" McGlory was back of the original venture to open it as a dance hall.

Now that the injunction has been dissolved the police will adopt the same methods used when McGlory's nephew, Campbell, was in charge of the dance hall.

LEGAL NOTES.

ENFORCEMENT OF HEALTH REGULATIONS IN TENEMENT HOUSES.—The Board of Health, in July, last year, directed John G. Wendel to remove the "dirty papers from the walls and ceilings" of a tenement house owned by him, to "thoroughly clean and whitewash the walls and ceilings of the cellar," and to do certain other work, including the furnishing of suitable ash and garbage receptacles. The order was founded upon the provision of the city charter requiring "the owner or lessee of any tenement house," to do certain things. The order not being complied with, the statutory penalty of $200, being $10 a day for twenty days during which the offense continued, was recovered in a suit brought against Wendel in the Municipal Court. Upon the trial the propriety and reasonableness of the requirements of the Board of Health, so far as they related to the condition of the premises, were not contested, but Mr. Wendel claimed that, as he had leased the premises in 1888 for twenty-one years to Anton Ehrmann, such lessee was the person liable for the penalty. A judgment rendered for the plaintiff on the trial was reversed by the Appellate Term, in an opinion by Justice O'Gorman, in which Justice Giegerich concurred. The Court held that lessee and not the owner should be held responsible for violations of law which related to the conditions created by the use of the building as a tenement house, especially where, as in this case, the lessee covenated to make all repairs and to comply with all orders of the Department of Health respecting the premises. In an elaborate dissenting opinion Justice Beekman holds that the fact that the lease to Ehrmann contained a covenant that he should comply with all orders of the Board of Health at his own expense, could not avail to relieve the lessor from a public duty with the performance of which he was charged by the statute. The law having devolved the prescribed duty upon the owner, he could not, as between himself and the Health Department, relieve himself from that duty by contracting with another for its performance.

LIFE INSURANCE.—Joseph H. Tooker, Jr., as assignee of a policy of $5,000, issued by the Security Trust Company, a Pennsylvania corporation, upon the life of his father, recovered judgment against the corporation on the trial, at White Plains. That decision, which was unanimously sustained by the Appellate Division in Brooklyn, in an opinion by Presiding Justice Goodrich, has just received affirmance in the Court of Appeals. The company had, on several occasions, allowed Seymour L. Rau to solicit policies for it, and permitted him to deliver them without exacting payment in cash, or the delivery of the premium receipt, as required by the terms of the policy. This, the Court held, constituted Rau the company's agent, with authority to waive the condition requiring payment in cash. In this case, on the suggestion of Rau, two notes of the son were given for the premium of $539.50 and the policy delivered to the insured. It appeared that the father was not prepared to pay the premium in cash, and was prevented by the articles of his partnership from giving notes. At this time he was in apparent good health. When the notes were given Tooker told Rau that he would pay cash for them, within a couple of days. Two days subsequently Rau telephoned Tooker for the cash. He was reminded that he had not given the premium receipt, and he promised to take it up three days later. On the last of the three days the insured was at his office, but on that night he was taken suddenly ill, and died the next day. The day before his death the notes were paid by a check of the plaintiff's wife to the order of Rau, who deposited it in his own bank, and sent his check to the general agents of the company. The check, after the death of the insured, was returned to Rau. The Court says the insurance company was estopped from denying the due receipt of the premium.

CONTRACT TO FURNISH GOODS.—Leopold Miller and others, a firm of Baltimore tobacco merchants, entered into a contract with Herman Ellis, a manufacturer of this city, to the effect that during the ensuing period of five years an allowance of $1,000 a year should be made on the sales of cigarettes by the manufacturer, and a further allowance of 2 per cent. below the price of such goods given to any other house in New York and New Jersey. In consideration of this, the merchants, upon their part, covenanted to push the sale of these cigarettes as against any other brands, and not to sell them at less than a price named. In a suit brought by Ellis to recover from Miller and others the value of goods sold, a judgment rendered on the trial in favor of the plaintiff, and overruling a counterclaim of breach of contract, was affirmed by the First Appellate Division, which held that the contract did not bind the manufacturers thereafter to sell, nor the dealers thereafter to buy, any specific quantity of cigarettes, but simply fixed the terms which should control such sales as might in the future be made. Justices Patterson and Williams gave dissenting opinions. The Court of Appeals has now ordered a reversal and a new trial, holding, by Judge Cullen, that a contract to furnish at least $1,000 worth of cigarettes a year, plus 2 per cent. of that sum, was implied by the agreement, and the measure of damages for the breach of the contract by the manufacturer's refusal to furnish the cigarettes was the difference between the amount the dealers were to receive in case they performed it and the cost of performance.

New York Bankers Invite Mr. McKinley

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—A delegation from the Associated Bankers of New York, consisting of E. S. Schenck, G. W. McGarrah, William Sherer, and Charles H. Fancher, called at the White House today and invited the President to attend the banquet to be given by the bankers on Dec. 19. The President said, in substance, that he feared public business would prevent his accepting. From the White House the delegation went to the Treasury Department and secured Secretary Gage's promise to attend the banquet.

GOFF DISCHARGES JURORS

Entire Panel for December to be Redrawn.

Recorder Adopts Drastic Measure to Show His Displeasure — Dissension Among Talesmen.

Sixty-seven talesmen, constituting the jury panel for the December term of court in Part II., General Sessions, were yesterday discharged for the term by Recorder Goff, to whom, it is said, have come rumors of dissensions, bickerings, and accusations among the jurymen, rendering impartial verdicts an impossibility. Many of the cases of those persons arrested by Superintendent McCullagh's deputies, charged with illegal registration and other violations of the elections law, have been placed on the Recorder's calendar. Four of these cases have been tried since the first of the month, resulting in two acquittals, one disagreement, and one conviction with a recommendation for mercy.

This latter verdict was arrived at by a jury late yesterday afternoon, after all of the talesmen, with the exception of themselves, had been discharged in their presence. It was first reported by Foreman Paul of this jury that it was impossible to reach a verdict, but upon being instructed as to the meaning of a reasonable doubt, a verdict of guilty was returned after a few minutes' further deliberation. The prisoner was Paul Paskler, a negro, of 239 West One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street.

In addition to the election cases, three acquittals have been rendered by the December jurors, two in larceny cases and one in an assault case. The case which apparently caused the jury panel's discharge was that of Jacob A. Kasschau, charged with grand larceny. Kasschau, according to the complaint of W. H. Oliver of Orange, N. J., advertised for sale, last Spring, a half interest in the Star Plating Works of 49 Crosby Street. Oliver negotiated for the purchase of a half interest, and, upon the affidavit of Kasschau that there were no mortgages or liens upon the property, was induced to pay $1,500 for an interest. Shortly afterward he learned, he says, that the Charles Cooper Company held a mortgage of $600 on the plant. The jury, whose foreman was Solomon Schelinsky, and of which Charles Doelger, the brewer, was a member, after asking if they might disregard the documentary evidence in the case and consider only the testimony, returned a verdict of not guilty.

Upon receiving this verdict, Recorder Goff directed Clerk Wolf to discharge the jury for the term. The Clerk did so, and the jurymen filed out in great surprise. Without explaining his action, the Recorder discharged the remaining talesmen, with the exception of the twelve hearing the Paskler case. The jurors congregated in the court corridors and speculated vainly as to the cause of the Recorder's unusual course. No explanation could be advanced by any of them. When the Paskler evidence was all in, the remaining jurors retired and in half an hour returned to announce a disagreement. The Recorder defined a reasonable doubt for them, and the twelve men again retired. In a few minutes they returned to announce a verdict of guilty with a recommendation for mercy.

"All of the other members of the panel to which you belong," said the Recorder, "have been discharged for the term. I will therefore discharge you also."

The Recorder then left the Criminal Courts building hurriedly to keep an engagement. When asked if he would make some statement regarding his action, he said that he had nothing to say. Upon good authority, however, it is understood that information had reached the Recorder and Assistant District Attorney O'Connor, who has prosecuted the election cases, that some of the jurymen have accused each other during their deliberations and elsewhere of favoring the defendant in alleged violations of the elections law, while counter accusations of leanings toward the prosecution on the part of others have been made. These accusations have been followed by many bitter wrangles and disputes. It was intimated, though no corroboration of the statement could be had, that some of the talesmen had been approached by friends of those charged with violating the elections law.

A new panel will be drawn to-day, and the court trials will go on as usual Monday.

ENGINEERS VISIT COLUMBIA.

President Low Makes a Speech of Welcome—Session Closes To-day.

The American Society of Mechanical Engineers, which has been in session since Tuesday, met yesterday in Havemeyer Hall, at Columbia University. There were about 600 members and guests present. President Charles H. Morgan presided. President Low welcomed the engineers and their friends to the building. Several papers were then read on various engineering topics.

The members then went to the Trustees' room in the library building, where they were received by President Low. Later they went through Engineering Hall.

The session will close to-day at a meeting at 12 West Thirty-first Street.

DEMOCRATIC WOMEN DISSENT.

Refuse Republican Sisters' Request to Enter Active Political Field.

The Democratic women of the city are not going into politics. Mrs. Margaret Holmes Bates, Secretary of the New York City Legislative League, spoke for them at a meeting of the league yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Cornelia S. Robinson, President of the West End Women's Republican Club, described the methods of the members in canvassing the tenement house districts through canvassers, who received $10 and $12 a week.

"And we want the Democratic women to organize," said Mrs. Robinson, in a final exhortation. "It will do you good, and it will do us good. Such work will raise women to the level of men—here Mrs. Robinson led the league in laughter— or, at any rate, they will think so."

"No," said Mrs. Bates, rising, "I would as soon be a book agent as go canvassing in the slums, and I am a Democrat from way back. I don't wish the Democratic women to organize. Women have been acted for their work in the churches ever since the churches were founded. They have held bazaars and sewed and looked after the poor, but they never were given salaries, and if they tried to get into the pulpit they have usually been kicked out. And now that they are getting out of jobbing for the churches they have begun to do chores for the politicians. No, a woman can make $10 or $12 a week cooking."

Mrs. Robinson explained that the West End club's employes had been book agents, and that it was a work not alone for themselves, but for principle, every woman's duty being to put into power the party she believed would do the most for the country. Mrs. Bates preserved a dissenting silence.

FAMOUS SONG WRITER DEAD.

Henry Russell, Who Composed "A Life on the Ocean Wave," Passes Away.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—Henry Russell, the well-known song writer, died yesterday.

Henry Russell was one of the most popular song writers and vocalists of his day. His songs had an enduring quality, and were known at one time as well in America as in England. During his active days he wrote or composed more than 800 songs, among them being "A Life on the Ocean Wave," "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," "I'm Afloat," "Woodman, Spare That Tree," "Carlo, the Newfoundland Dog," "The Gambler's Wife," "The Dream of the Revenger," and "The Maniac."

He was born at Sheerness in 1813. He early showed a decided taste for music, and in 1825 went to Bologna to study music. The year 1833 found him in New York. He remained in this country and Canada for seven years, then returned to England. "Carlo, the Newfoundland Dog," was one of the most popular of his songs, and he always prefaced it by telling the story of its origin. A mother was on an Atlantic liner when her child fell overboard. A Newfoundland dog saw the child, and immediately sprang after it. The dog kept the child afloat until both were rescued.

While here Mr. Russell was for a time the guest of Fenimore Cooper at his home, and there he met William Cullen Bryant, Longfellow, N. P. Willis, and other famous men. After his return to London he gave entertainments in London and all over the country. He published a memoir in 1846, and in 1860 two volumes of copyright songs. His last composition was a song, "Our Empress Queen," written in honor of her Majesty's Jubilee. He retired over forty years ago.

GATES STOLE ABOUT $20,000.

Frank & Du Bois, the insurance brokers of 47 William Street, whose office manager, William W. Gates, is a defaulter to the amount of about $20,000, yesterday issued a statement concerning the affair. Gates is still a fugitive, and it is not likely that the firm he defrauded will take any steps to apprehend him. The statement from the firm is, in part, as follows:

William M. Gates entered our employ some twenty-odd years ago as an office boy. He always appeared to us to be a straightforward, honest man. After a time we made him the office manager. He paid the salaries of the clerks every two weeks, in cash, and it was his duty to check the bank balance and to keep himself in touch with all office work.

As we had such implicit confidence in his honesty, whenever he would bring the check-book to any members of the firm and ask to have a check signed, it was always done with only the examination on the part of the firm, that the check corresponded with the stub. In this way he drew duplicate checks for salary accounts, which were payable in cash to the amount of $800 to $900 every two weeks. By this means, as far as we are able to learn, he has stolen about $5,000 this year at the outside. The entire loss will probably prove to be about $20,000.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Adopts Resolution Asking Congress to Strengthen Currency Law.

At the monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday, John Harsen Rhoades, Chairman of the Committee of Finance and Currency, introduced a resolution dealing with the currency question which was unanimously adopted. The resolution said, in part:

Whereas, The recent election has shown conclusively that the majority of the people of this country are in favor of the maintenance of the gold standard and a sound currency, and

Whereas, We believe prompt action on the part of Congress to remove any question of doubt as to the right to substitute silver for gold will be hailed with satisfaction by the people and add another strong link to the confidence which now exists throughout the Nation, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York respectfully requests and urges upon Congress the vital importance of adopting at the present session a bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange gold coin for any other money issued or coined by the United States whenever it may be necessary to do so.

George E. Seward, Chairman of the Committee on State and Municipal Taxation, reported that the committee has prepared in draft "a bill intended to effect alleviation of some of the recognized evils of our system of taxation." The Chamber will be asked to revise the work of the committee at the January meeting, as the draft of the bill is now in the hands of an expert, who is going over it. A resolution was adopted that the bill when completed be printed, as well as any report from the committee which will be acted on at the meeting next month.

GREAT SOUTH BAY DIVIDED.

End of Litigation Which Has Lasted Almost Fifty Years.

Justice Marean has confirmed the report of the commission appointed by the Supreme Court in the matter of the division of Great South Bay between the town of Brookhaven and the Smith heirs. The Commissioners were ex-County Judge Thomas Young of Huntington, Jonathan B. Terry of Southold, and County Clerk-elect Solomon Ketcham of Amityville. They were appointed to divide the bay under an interlocutory judgment of the Supreme Court in the suit brought by the heirs of William Smith against the town of Brookhaven.

The tract assigned to the Smith heirs consists of 13,397½ acres of land under water at the west end of the bay, and the town of Brookhaven gets 17,947½ acres. The rights of the Smith heirs in Great South Bay have been a subject of litigation for almost half a century.

ELECTRIC MOTOR COMBINE.

It was announced yesterday at a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Electric Vehicle Company that the company had bought out the entire plant of the Riker Electric Motor Vehicle Company. At the meeting yesterday the Board of Directors was reorganized to meet the new conditions, and new officers were elected. The absorption of the Riker Company will give the Electric Vehicle Company, according to the statements of its officers, a complete monopoly of all the patents for manufacturing electric vehicles in this country, and will probably also give it control of all the patents for gasoline vehicles. The Riker Company will still retain its plant at Elizabeth, N. J. Its stockholders, however, will hold stock in the Electric Vehicle Company, instead of in the Riker.

The transaction is simply an absorption of the stock of the Riker Company. The Riker Company had $4,000,000 worth of common stock and $1,000,000 worth of preferred stock. The Electric Vehicle Company had $8,000,000 worth of preferred and $10,000,000 worth of common stock. By the exchange of stock from the Riker Company its preferred and common stock will each be increased by $1,000,000.

By the reorganization George H. Day becomes President of the Electric Vehicle Company. He was formerly President of the Columbia Electric Vehicle Company, which was merged into the present Electric Vehicle Company some time ago. He succeeds Robert McA. Lloyd, who resigned. John Jacob Astor is from the Board of Directors, saying that he would not be able to be in the city much during the coming Winter. By his request George Chapman, his representative, was placed on the board. T. C. Stevens of Washington, D. C., formerly President of the Riker Company, is now on the Board of Directors. T. J. Regan, the representative of W. C. Whitney, is also on the Board of Directors. W. H. Johnson, who was general manager of the Electric Vehicle Company, was elected Second Vice President, and A. L. Riker, who had been Second Vice President of the Riker Company, was elected Third Vice President of the Vehicle Company. H. M. Byllesby, formerly general manager of the Riker Company, was elected First Vice President.

JAMES E. CAMPBELL'S DEBTS.

The Hoffman House Company obtained judgment yesterday against ex-Gov. James E. Campbell of Ohio for $1,359 for board at the Hoffman House. The judgment was taken by default in the City Court on the application of James E. Gaynor, counsel for the hotel company. Mr. Campbell was properly served with the summons and complaint, but failed to make a defense to the same.

The ex-Governor lived at the Hoffman House up to two months ago, when he left there, and his present city home is unknown. He has a law office in Room 49 of the Equitable Building. None of the persons in charge of the building could give Mr. Campbell's home address last night.

A few days ago public attention was called to the ex-Governor through a lawyer advertising for his whereabouts. This advertisement was prompted by the fact that a check for $50 given by Mr. Campbell to David Murphy and drawn on the First National Bank of Hamilton, Ohio, had gone to protest and the lawyer wanted an explanation.

Ex-Gov. Campbell since coming to New York, nearly eight years ago, has had several experiences as to money matters. In 1898 he confessed judgment in favor of Frank H. Coyne for $1,222 on a check drawn on the First National Bank of Hamilton. He always claimed that this was an accommodation loan. He was also examined in supplementary proceedings on a promissory note for $5,000 held by the First National Bank of Chicago. This latter action was finally settled. He made no attempt to conceal the fact that instead of making money out of politics he had lost much that he had earned when he was a successful lawyer. In fact, when he came to New York, he said, he was burdened with many debts contracted while he was devoting his time to politics instead of his profession.

For many years ex-Gov. Campbell was one of the most popular Democrats in Ohio, serving three terms in Congress from a nominally Republican district, and then being once elected Governor of the State. He was a candidate for a second term, as well as having been prominently mentioned as a Presidential possibility in 1892.

NEWS OF NEW JERSEY

RUNAWAY IN A CEMETERY.

Team of a Funeral Coach Cause a Panic at Newark.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 6.—An exciting runaway enlivened proceedings at a funeral in Fairmount Cemetery, Newark, this afternoon.

The frightened horses tore along the road leading to the Central Avenue entrance.

The mourners who had attended the obsequies of William Hayes, a well-known man about town, were departing in their coaches when a team attached to a closed carriage took fright and suddenly started forward. The driver was standing on his box, and was thrown under the wheels, which passed over him, but was not dangerously hurt.

Several other coaches were ahead of them. The screams of the women warned the drivers, however, and they turned their horses, and drove them over graves to the right or left of the path.

Harry Walker made a brave but futile effort to stop the runaways and save his companions. He climbed from the inside of the coach by skirting the side of the vehicle, on to the box. He tried to seize the reins, but they were trailing on the ground. Then he resolved to take the desperate chance of attempting to reach the horses' heads. He climbed down to the pole and started to crawl along by steadying himself against the sides of the animals. His foot slipped and he fell, but managing to grasp the pole clung to it with arms and legs.

Peter Bey, Assistant Asessor of the Newark Tax Department, who had been one of the pall bearers, was in one of the coaches ahead. He saw the runaways approach and realized the peril of the occupants. Nerving himself, Bey waited at the side of the path for the madly galloping horses. Then he sprang forward, gripped the bridle of the nearest horse, and clung with all his strength. The horses dragged Bey more than fifty yards before he could turn their heads. Finally he obtained the assistance of William Bedjed Walker, master, from his dangerous position, and the fainting women were revived.

CLUNG TO REVOLVING SHAFT.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Dec. 6.—Edward Boyle, employed at the roundhouse of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, had his feet and ankles badly scalded last evening. He was descending into a vat, which is partly filled with boiling water, to repair some machinery. An old ladder taken from a wrecked freight car was inside the vat, and was used by the employes to get at the machinery. The steam rotted this ladder, and when he was half way down it broke.

Boyle grasped and held fast to a revolving shaft, which was just low enough to let his legs dangle in the water. In this position he hung until his cries brought two fellow-workmen to his assistance. He was dragged from his perilous position, and Dr. G. W. Tyrrell was summoned. Boyle was unconscious for some time. The doctor thinks he will recover, although he may lose both legs. His hands are also badly blistered where he clung to the revolving shaft.

CAR TRACKS AS REAL ESTATE.

Big Test Case Before the New Jersey Board of Taxation.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 6.—The State Board of Taxation to-day began a hearing in the case of the appeal of the North Jersey Street Railway Company on the assessment placed on its tracks, overhead wires, and cars by the Newark Tax Commissioners this year. The company's property was assessed at a valuation of $3,200,000, and the company asks that the assessment be reduced to $640,000.

It is claimed by the local Commissioners that under a recent decision of the Supreme Court the tracks and wires should be assessed as real estate and have a real estate value from their occupancy of the public streets, while the trolley people contend that the only value upon which the property can be assessed is its actual cost, with a deduction for depreciation from use.

The decision in the case will affect every municipality in the State where there are trolley lines, and is being awaited with much interest by city and township authorities. If the State Board decides in favor of the city, and that right-of-way privileges give the trolley tracks a real estate value, the result will be to largely increase municipal revenue from the trolley companies throughout the State.

At to-day's hearing the entire session was occupied with witnesses for the railroad company, whose joint testimony was to the effect that the entire value of the company's tracks, wires, cars, tools, and machinery was $1,200,000.

LANDIS WILL CONTEST.

Disinherited Sons Make Charges Against Aunt to Whom the Bulk of the Property Was Left.

VINELAND, N. J., Dec. 6.—The Landis will contest began its course in the Cumberland County Orphans' Court here to-day.

Mr. Landis disinherited his sons, Richard W. Meade and James Montevert Landis, not leaving them a dollar. To-day they testified that their aunt, Miss Matilda Landis, who under the will inherited the bulk of the estate of her brother, Founder C. K. Landis, used undue influence over him. Their aunt, they asserted, always claimed that Montevert, the youngest son, was not a son of Founder Landis, but an illegitimate child of their mother, who was a daughter of the late Commodore Meade. She was divorced from Mr. Landis, and subsequently married a German Baron.

Other witnesses, including County Prosecutor Cole of Cape May and Senator Baker of this place, gave evidence tending to prove Founder Landis was insane.

Charles Kline Landis, the founder of Vineland, Sea Isle City, Hammonton, and other South Jersey towns, died some months ago. Over two-thirds of his estate Mr. Landis left to his sister, Miss Matilda T. Landis, and, after several minor legacies to employes, the residue he directed to be divided into four equal parts among the Vineland Historical and Antiquarian Society, his eldest son, Charles K. Landis, Jr., and the latter's little children. Among Mr. Landis's miscellaneous bequests were twenty-five building lots in Vineland to Miss Katie Gottone, a bookkeeper, and twenty-five building lots in Sea Isle City to Marcus Fry, a private secretary.

Mr. Landis studied law, and was admitted to the Philadelphia bar. He went to Brooklyn and fell in love with the daughter of Commodore Meade. The old Commodore, who opposed the match, is said to have chased the bridegroom with a shotgun, and for years after threatened to shoot him on sight. Mr. Landis and his wife finally separated, and the latter, after procuring a divorce, married a German Baron. She is now in Chicago, and has for a long time been in communication with her sons, Richard and Montevert, with a view to her appearance as a witness in the case, and will appear if the standing of Montevert is attacked.

While the family affairs of Mr. Landis were notorious a quarter of a century ago, Uri Carruth, editor of The Vineland Independent, printed many abusive articles about him, and on March 19, 1875, Landis shot and killed Carruth in the latter's office. He was acquitted on the ground of insanity.

Richard Landis, one of the disinherited sons, incurred his father's wrath by marrying Miss Emma Frambes of Philadelphia against his wishes. Owing to a misunderstanding with his father, Montevert was disinherited by a codicil attached or pinned to the will by the latter in a fit of anger only a few days before his death. Mr. Landis, while seemingly implacable toward his sons, interested himself in Richard, who is an artist, and assisted him by arranging with friends, prominent business men in Philadelphia, where Richard was living with his bride, to have painted by the young artist portraits of themselves at the father's expense.

MEASLES IN JERSEY CITY.

Twenty Public School Pupils and Two Teachers Down with the Disease.

Measles is epidemic in the Lafayette district of Jersey City. Fifteen pupils of Public School No. 13 and five of No. 22 are ill. Their illness involves the absence of nearly 100 other pupils living in houses in which the cases have developed. Miss Kate M. Smith and Miss Esther McNeill, teachers, are also prostrated by the disease.

None of the cases is likely to terminate fatally.

DOES NOT WANT HIS SALARY.

Col. Dickinson Will Turn It Over to Republican County Committee.

Col. Samuel D. Dickinson, who has been nominated as Assistant Collector of the Port of New York for Jersey City, yesterday announced that he had agreed to contribute the entire salary of the office to the funds of the Republican County Committee.

"I do not need the money," said he, "and I would not have taken the place under any other condition."

The salary is $2,000, and the duties of the position are nominal.

NAPHTHA LIFE BOATS.

Life Saving Stations Along the Coast May Be Equipped with Them.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Dec. 6.—It is probable that the life-saving stations along the Atlantic Coast will be equipped with naphtha launches within the next twelve months, in addition to the lifeboats now in use. Capt. Timothy Parker, who is in command of one of the stations here, says the Government has been testing the seagoing qualities of naphtha boats, and has obtained excellent results.

"At a trial last week, a naphtha boat was put out in a heavy sea and worked perfectly. The boat was backed and stopped in fourteen seconds. At another trial in a heavy sea the naphtha boat was propelled through the big breakers with comparative ease, while a boat manned by twelve oarsmen, made little headway.

MRS. A. S. GRAHAM DIVORCED.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 6.—Mrs. Anna Day Graham of this city has secured a decree of divorce in the District Court at Mandan, S. D., from her husband, Andrew S. Graham, whose father was formerly President of the Ninth Ward National Bank of this city. Mrs. Graham is a daughter of Charles G. Campbell, a former President of the Manufacturers' Bank of Newark. Both are well known in social circles here. The decree was obtained on the ground of non-support.

Two previous attempts to obtain a decree were made by Mrs. Graham in North Dakota, but were fought by her husband. It is said that Mrs. Graham will now return to Newark to become the wife of a prominent physician here.

Rubber Factory Strike Quickly Ended.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, Dec. 6.—The strike which was declared by the cutters at the Milltown India Rubber Works yesterday was concluded this afternoon, when the cutters returned to work. The strikers held a meeting this morning and later a delegation visited John C. Evans, the Superintendent of the factory, and found him ready to debate any question with them excepting the question of who shall be employed there. They were satisfied with the treatment, and decided to return to work.

IMPURE MOLASSES SOLD.

The Board of Health Opens War on the Adulterated Article.

The Board of Health yesterday opened a war on adulterated molasses which, according to Commissioner Murphy, is being sold throughout the city as the pure article. The action of the board is based on a movement in behalf of pure molasses, the agitation of which is now going on in New Orleans. Wholesale, dealers say that so extensive has become the sale of the adulterated article that there is practically no call for pure molasses from grocers, who find larger profits by buying the adulterated article and selling it for the pure. Glucose is said to be the most common adulterant. Besides this admixture there are brands of molasses that are bleached with chemicals injurious to health.

The Department of Agriculture in Washington, which has taken up the New Orleans agitation for pure molasses, said in its last report that the molasses output is adulterated with glucose, sorghum, and other agents. In order to make the molasses light in color, it is bleached with peroxide of hydrogen, bone black, sulphuric acid, sulphur fumes, and other bleaching agents harmful to health. The "molasses" as sold here, according to a wholesale dealer, is glucose syrup with a flavoring of molasses, which is sold at from 18 to 21 cents a gallon. Pure molasses is worth 35 cents a gallon, and at that offers less profit to retail dealers than the artificial mixture.

At the office of this same wholesaler it was said that comparatively there was little demand for pure molasses, and that the firm sold adulterated molasses to nearly all of its customers.

"The mixture is simply one of 50 per cent. glucose and molasses," the dealer said. "It is perfectly harmless, and as it is a close imitation of the real thing, few customers know the difference. Something like 95 per cent. of the molasses sold in this city is adulterated. Only the highly colored or bleached article is harmful, and that we do not handle. The reason the retailers prefer the mixed molasses is that there is more profit in it."

When Dr. Dillingham, Assistant Sanitary Superintendent of the Borough of Manhattan, was seen last night, he said that he had sent a staff of Assistants all over the city to gather samples of molasses. These will be analyzed. The doctor said that the result of the analysis would not be known for several days, and that until then

HOUSE PASSES ARMY BILL

Senate Will Be Prevented from Debating it by a Trick.

Canteen Section Made Stronger—200 Surgeons, 30 Dentists and a Veterinary Corps Provided.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The House of Representatives to-day, at the end of a long sitting, passed the Army Reorganization bill by a vote of 166 to 133. Three Democrats, Messrs. Hall of Pennsylvania, and Underhill and Clayton of New York, voted with the Republicans for the bill, and Mr. McCall, Republican, of Massachusetts, with the Democrats against it. Otherwise it was a strict party vote.

The Senate opponents of reorganization discovered to-day that by careful parliamentary management on the part of the Republicans they have been deprived of the opportunity to filibuster against the Army bill. When the House took up the subject, and proposed to limit discussion, those Democrats who are against reorganization and an enlarged regular army hoped to be able, by prolonging discussion in the Senate, to force a compromise by which the present status of the army should be extended for two or three years.

The bill sent to the House by Secretary Root was regularly introduced by Mr. Hull. When it was taken up in the Committee on Military Affairs, those parts of it that were disapproved by the majority of the committee were rejected, and the parts approved were assembled and reported to th House as Senate bill 4,300 of last session amended. That is the bill which the House passed.

It does not contain much of what Secretary Root had recommended and it carries some things he probably is sorry to see in the completed measure. But, whatever it contains, it is in shape to be sent at once to conference. The only motion necessary will be to ask for a committee on the disagreeing votes of the two houses. In that conference all the rest of the debate will be heard, and when agreement is reached the only vote will be upon agreeing to or rejecting the report. The chance for prolonged discussion is good.

The proposition which some of the Democrats attempted to commit their side to in caucus, an extension of the present temporary army until July 1, 1903, which was voted upon indirectly in the House to-day on a motion to recommit, commanded the votes of only about half the opposition and of two Republicans, Mr. McCall and Mr. Mann of Illinois. Many of the Democrats, however, voted against the motion because they were opposed not only to the reorganization bill, but also to continuing the temporary army at its present strength.

Quite a number of amendments were placed upon the bill before it was passed. The liveliest fight was made upon a substitute offered by Mr. Littlefield of Maine for the canteen section. The substitute absolutely prohibited the sale of intoxicants at military posts. Large delegations from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which is in session in this city, watched the fight from the galleries. When the vote was taken the prohibition amendment was carried by an overwhelming majority, 150 to 51.

An exciting passage in the debate was that which led up to the vote on the proposition to establish a corps of veterinary surgeons, with a Colonel, a Major, four Captains, ten Lieutenants, and twenty Second Lieutenants, veterinarians. The War Department was known to be opposed to giving veterinarians rank, but the Senate had been prevailed upon to adopt the European idea and create the corps. It was understood in the House that the chief place was to be filled by Gen. Huidekoper of Pennsylvania, who became pretty well known during the war with Spain, and Mr. Bingham gave color to the report by conducting the fight for the corps.

It is pretty well understood to-night that the Army bill is pretty near to the statute books. The completed bill may differ from both the Senate and the House bill, but it will be whipped into shape in conference, and not in the open Senate.

THE DEBATE IN THE HOUSE.

Several Important Amendments Adopted — Democrats Attempt to Extend the Present Law.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—When the House met an arrangement was agreed to by which the consideration of the Grout Oleomargarine bill, which was to have come up to-day under a special order made at the last session, was postponed until to-morrow, and the House proceeded with the consideration of the Army Reorganization bill.

The Hepburn amendment to provide that vacancies in the Quartermaster's Department could be filled from civil life or from volunteer officers commissioned since April 19, 1898, which was pending when the House adjourned yesterday, was voted down without division.

SURGEONS AND VETERINARIES.

Mr. Hay (Dem., Va.,) offered an amendment, which was adopted, authorizing the President to appoint fifty volunteer Surgeons with the rank of Major and 150 Assistant Surgeons with the rank of Captain for terms of two years, unless previously discharged. Mr. Otey (Dem., Va.,) offered an amendment to empower the Surgeon General of the army to employ not to exceed thirty Dental Surgeons, three of whom should be Chief Dental Surgeons.

Mr. Otey made a humorous speech in support of the amendment, appealing to every members to vote in the interest of 3,200,000 teeth. "Irrespective of party or the result of the late election," said he, "I vote to rid the old soldier of the toothache." The amendment was adopted.

Mr. Bingham (Rep., Penn.,) offered an amendment to provide for a corps of veterinary surgeons, one chief veterinarian with the rank of Colonel, one assistant chief with the rank of Major, four veterinarians with the rank of First Lieutenants, ten assistants with the rank of Second Lieutenants, and twenty assistants with the rank of Second Lieutenants of cavalry. Mr. Bingham explained that the proposed amendment was identical with the provision in the Senate bill. The establishment of a veterinary corps, he said, had the approval of Lieut. Gen. Miles, Gens. Brooke, Merritt, Wilson, and other high army officers. As the army would be reorganized under this bill, there would be upward of 35,000 animals to be cared for, and the economy of such a corps was beyond cavil.

Mr. Hull opposed the proposed amendment, on the ground that the acceptance of a section of the Senate bill would handicap the House in conference. Besides, he favored assimilated rank for the veterinary surgeons. Mr. Hay, a minority member of the committee, also opposed the amendment. Mr. Mondell (Rep., Wyoming,) opposed the proposition to commission "horse doctors" as officers of the United States Army.

Mr. Butler (Rep., Penn.,) and Mr. Bingham both resented the fling at "horse doctors," defending them as men of education and ability, whose services were of inestimable value to any army.

After some further discussion the amendment was adopted—80 to 72.

LARGER PAY AND SIGNAL CORPS.

Mr. Dick (Rep., Ohio,) offered an amendment to increase the pay corps of the army from three to four Paymasters, with the rank of Colonel, four to five with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, from nine to twenty with the rank of Major, and reducing those with the rank of Captain from twenty-seven to twenty-five. Mr. Dick read a letter from Paymaster General Bates urging the absolute necessity of an increase of the pay corps.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. McClellan (Dem., N. Y.,) gave notice that at the proper time he should offer a substitute for the whole bill, to continue in force the present law for a provisional army.

An amendment was adopted to increase the Signal Corps by one Lieutenant Colonel, two Majors, ten Captains, and ten First Lieutenants, and the proviso authorizing the President to appoint ten volunteer signal officers with the rank of First Lieutenant and ten with the rank of Second Lieutenant during the continuation of the Philippine war was stricken out.

Mr. Hull offered an amendment, which was agreed to, to make volunteer officers eligible to the grades of First and Second Lieutenants without regard to age.

The amendment was lost. Thereupon Mr. Mahon, (Rep., Penn.,) moved to strike out the paragraph to retire officers below the rank of Brigadier General who served during the civil war with the rank and pay of the next higher grade. Mr. Hull made an earnest plea against the amendment. Because those who wanted the provisions of the section extended had been disappointed, he said, this meritorious section should not be elliminated. Mr. Hay favored the amendment.

Mr Mahon said he would be frank. He was in favor of rewarding distinguished service, but he was opposed to giving additional pay and rank to officers who were not entitled to promotion. If the officers of the civil war who had been retired after years of hard service were not to be rewarded, certainly those who were still on the active list, seven-eighths of whom had never been through a campaign, should not be rewarded.

The Mahen amendment prevailed.

Mr. McDermott (Dem., N. J.,) offered an amendment to make it mandatory upon the President to reduce the enlisted force of the army to 25,000 on Dec. 1, 1902. He declared that, in his opinion, it was the absolute duty of every man, irrespective of party, to uphold the hands of the President. So long as the United States held the Philippines it was its duty to suppress the insurrection. But if it was not the intention to create an undemocratic and un-American standing army of 100,000 for all time, the act should be limited to two years. If the insurrection could not be suppressed in two years the islands should be sold to some European country, which wanted to buy a gold brick. [Democratic applause.] The amendment was defeated.

CANTEEN PROVISO STRENGTHENED.

Mr. Littlefield (Rep., Me.,) offered the following substitute for the canteen provision of the bill:

The sale of or dealing in beer, wine, or any intoxicating liquors by any person in any post, exchange, or canteen or army transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States, is hereby prohibited. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect.

Mr. Littlefield reviewed the long-standing controversy over this subject and the legislation enacted. The section for which the substitute was offered, he said, practically was a re-enactment of the present law. He read a letter from Adjt. Gen. Corbin stating that 95 per cent. of the officers of the army favored the canteen system.

Against the present opinion of Gen. Corbin, Mr Littlefield read a statement made by Gen. Corbin in 1892, condemning the canteen system as not conducive to discipline or the best interests of the soldier. He also read a statement by Gen. Ludlow, who testified to the good effect of discouraging the sale of liquor to soldiers in Cuba.

Mr. Fitzgerald, (Dem., Mass.,) opposed the amendment. He said he believed that every sensible member must recognize that the canteen system as now operated was the best method of handling this great question.

"Unless we desire to act as hypocrites," he said, "we should vote down this amendment. It is impossible to enforce prohibition in any part of this country or of the world. We cannot enlist 35,000 men for service in the Philippines or anywhere else who can be made total abstainers. We should seek to promote temperance in the way which will bring the best results. He concluded with an attack upon prohibition as it obtained in Maine.

Mr. Grosvenor (Rep., Ohio,) declared that prohibition had been a failure wherever it had been tried. Nevertheless, he said, he would vote for the amendment. If good came of it, he would thank God; if not, as he believed it would not, no harm would be done, and Congress could easily retrace its steps.

Mr. Slayden, (Dem., Texas,) who is a member of the Military Committee, opposed the amendment. If reason and not hysteria was to control legislation, he said, it would be voted down. He said that officers conversant with the workings of the canteen system were unanimous in indorsing it. It was an influence for temperance.

Mr. Pearce (Rep., Mo.,) opposed the amendment. After careful investigation, he said, he was prepared to assert that nothing would do so much to break down true temperance in the army as absolute prohibition.

Mr. Hay (Dem., Va.,) favored the amendment. Aside from the question of temperance, he believed it was wrong for the Government to engage in the sale of liquor. He was opposed to throwing temptation in the direct path of young men who entered the army. He asserted that the evidence of the army officers was not altogether on one side of the question. [Applause.]

Mr. Parker, (Rep., N. J.,) a member of the Military Committee, opposed the amendment. The whisky-drinking army of the old days, the sutler, and post trader, he said, had become a temperate army under the canteen system. Desertions in the seven years before the canteen system were double those for the same period afterward. The same figures held good for convictions for drunkenness.

After some further debate by Mr. Dick, (Rep., Ohio,) in favor of the amendment and Mr. Bartholdt (Rep., Mo.,) against it, Mr. Littlefield closed the debate on the amendment. He devoted his closing speech to defending prohibition in Maine, which he insisted made for morality and temperance.

The amendment was adopted by 159 to 51. Many members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union were in the gallery, and loudly applauded the result.

THE BILL COMPLETED.

Mr. Fitzgerald then proposed an amendment to prohibit the sale of liquor in the Capitol Building. Mr. Hull made the point of order that the amendment was not germane. Mr. Fitzgerald said that if the soldiers were to be prevented from drinking upon the premises of the United States members of Congress should not be allowed to drink in the Capitol. The Chair sustained the point of order, whereupon Mr. Williams (Dem., Miss.,) asked unanimous consent that Mr. Fitzgerald be allowed to offer his amendment.

"I object," said Mr. Shattuc, (Rep., Ohio.)

Mr. Kluttz (Dem., S. C.,) moved to strike out the section for the retirement of Gen. Shafter as a Major General. He was opposed, he said, to the promotion and retirement of officers. Mr. Jett (Dem., Ill.,) supported the motion. Mr. Hull opposed it. He reviewed Gen. Shafter's career, and contended that the proposition to retire him as a Major General was an act of meager justice to a distinguished officer.

The motion prevailed, 101 to 100.

Mr. Hull then moved to strike out the next section, which was designed to retire Gen. Fitzhugh Lee and Gen. James H. Wilson as Brigadier Generals and it also prevailed. There was no division on this vote.

This completed the bill, which was then reported to the House, where Mr. McClellan (Dem., N. Y.,) moved to recommit the bill, with instructions to report back a bill extending the present law until July 1, 1903.

The motion to recommit was lost, 68 to 248. Two Republicans—Mr. McCall (Mass.) and Mr. Mann (Ill.,)—voted with the sixty-six members of the opposition for this motion. Many Democrats voted with the Republicans against it. A roll call was demanded for the final passage of the bill.

The bill was passed—166 to 133—and at 6:05 P. M. the House adjourned.

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS.

War Department Sends Reports to Congress—The Michigan-Mississippi Connection Plan.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The War Department to-day sent to Congress reports on a number of important river and harbor projects, including that for connecting the Mississippi River with Lake Michigan by means of the Illinois River and the Chicago Sanitary Canal, and also for extensive improvements of the Sault Ste. Marie River, connecting Lakes Superior and Huron.

The total cost of the project for connecting Lake Michigan and the Mississippi is placed at $7,317,977 for a seven-foot depth, or $8,653,247 for an eight-foot depth. The project involves the construction of twelve locks and two dams, with movable weirs. The estimates are based on the assumption that all necessary franchises in connection with the construction will be ceded free of cost to the United States. The cost of an independent eight-foot waterway from Sag Bridge, on the Sanitary Canal, to Lake Michigan, via the Little Calumet and Calumet Rivers (the Sag route) is estimated at $5,680,186, making a total of $14,333,433 as the estimated cost of an eight-foot waterway via the Sag route.

The Board of Engineers expresses the opinion that the additional cost will not justify the construction at the present time of an auxiliary canal from the Sanitary Canal to Lake Michigan by way of the Sag and Calumet route, and is also of opinion that such a route would not become a necessity until the commerce of either the seven-foot or eight-foot route should develop to a degree not expected for years.

The estimate for improving the channel between Lakes Superior and Huron through St. Mary's River, including Hay Lake Channel, is $9,000,000. The distance is sixty-four miles, part of which has been improved.

The estimate for deepening the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal to twenty-one feet is $218,000.

BRIG. GEN. EAGAN RESTORED

Was Suspended Feb. 9, 1899, for Attack on Gen. Miles—Col. Weston to Succeed Him as Commissary General.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Brig. Gen. Charles P. Eagan, Commissary General of Subsistence, who has been under suspension since Feb. 9, 1899, by sentence of court-martial, for intemperate and abusive language concerning Lieut. Gen. Miles, in connection with the army beef investigation, was restored to duty to-day, and immediately afterward was placed on the retired list of the army.

The story is told in two special orders which were bulletined at the War Department this afternoon. They are issued by command of Lieut. Gen. Miles, commanding the army. The first is as follows:

War Department, Washington, D. C., Dec. 6, 1900.

In the case of Brig. Gen. Charles P. Eagan, Commissary General of Subsistence, United States Army, the unexpired portion of the sentence, as published in General Orders No. 24, Feb. 9, 1899, from headquarters of the army, by the direction of the President is remitted and he is restored to a status of duty with station in this city. ELIHU ROOT.

Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant General's Office.

The retirement from active service by the President, Dec. 6, 1900, under the provisions of Section 1,243, Revised Statutes, of Brig. Gen. Charles P. Eagan, Commissary General of Subsistence, upon his own application, after thirty years' service, is announced by the Secretary of War. Gen. Eagan will proceed to his home. The travel enjoined is necessary for the public service. By command of Lieut. Gen. Miles.

The vacancy thus created will enable the President to carry out his purpose of appointing Col. John F. Weston, Assistant Commissary General of Subsistence, to be Commissary General. The nomination will be sent to the Senate in a day or two.

Col. Weston is one of the most popular officers in the army, and has had a long and creditable military career. He served with distinction in a Kentucky regiment of the volunteer army during the civil war, and was mustered out as a Major. During the Spanish war he was made a Brigadier General of Volunteers, and served with distinction in the Santiago campaign. He has been Acting Commissary General of Subsistence ever since the suspension of Gen. Eagan, nearly two years ago, but has drawn only the pay of a Colonel.

CHANGES IN SUBSIDY BILL.

All Ships Must Carry Half Their Cargo Capacity When Leaving This Country — Other Amendments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The Senate Committee on Commerce held its first meeting of the session to-day. The meeting was devoted mainly to the consideration of the ship subsidy bill and to amendments suggested by Chairman Frye. The most important of these amendments was one providing that all ships shall take 50 per cent. of their cargo capacity when leaving a port of the United States for a foreign port. In presenting this modification of the bill Mr. Frye said that the effect of its incorporation in the bill would be to increase the amount of cargo which must be taken, but that it would so distribute it among the various ships that there would be no inequality or injustice.

The amendment was adopted by the committee, as were several others. The cargo provision is much shorter than that of the old bill, and reads as follows:

No vessel shall be entitled to full compensation unless she shall have cleared from a port of the United States with cargo to the amount of 50 per cent. of her capacity for carrying commercial cargo.

Another amendment relates to the division of the annual award of $9,000,000 between ships on the Atlantic Ocean and those on the Pacific. As originally provided, 70 per cent. of the amount was to be expended upon the Atlantic and 30 per cent. on the Pacific, with an additional provision that in case the entire 30 per cent. should not be utilized on the Pacific it might be diverted to the Atlantic. There was no reciprocal provision in the interest of the Pacific ships. That is provided by to-day's action, the language of the provision being as follows:

In case the said Atlantic Ocean trade shall not require the whole amount of the said 70 per cent., and the said Pacific Ocean trade shall require, in respect of the vessels engaged in said Pacific Ocean trade, the expenditure of more than the said 30 per cent. of said $9,000,00 in any such year, there may be expended, pursuant to the provisions of this act any sum within the said $9,000,000 remaining and not earned, as aforesaid, in respect of the vessels in the Atlantic Ocean trade.

There are also conditions in the exemptions made in section 9 of the bill. The exceptions in subdivision C of the last previous print of the bill are limited to sections 1 and 7, sections 6, 9, and 10 being stricken out.

Portion "B" of section 1, relating to the granting of American registry to foreign built ships, was amended to further guard against fraud, and as amended it reads:

To such foreign-built steamships as shall have been under contract for construction and duly authenticated copies of said contract or contracts thereof shall have been filed with the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 1st of February, 1899, and which contract or contracts shall have been in due course carried into execution by the either completed or in the course of performance on or before Jan. 1, 1903, and which steamships shall have been already completed, under any such contract or contracts or shall, when built, as provided for in this act, and the registry requested, receive, or be fit to receive, the class of A1 in the records of American and foreign shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit, such vessels having been actually or originally contracted for on or before Feb. 1, 1899, by a citizen, or citizens, of the United States, (including as such, citizens' corporations created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof,) who shall have been such since the 1st day of February, 1899, or by a foreign corporation or association, of which not less than a majority of the shares of the capital thereof shall have been actually owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States, (including as such citizens, corporations created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof,) and really representing American capital on the said Feb. 1, 1899, and shall have continued to be so owned until the passage of this act.

The purpose of the amendment relating to foreign-built ships is to show from records already on file in the Treasury Department exactly what vessels of that description are to be admitted to American registry under the bill, and thus avoid all dispute as to the total volume of the tonnage.

It is claimed that the result of the amendment would be to require that every foreign-built steamship described in Clause B of Section 9 should have been actually contracted for and the contracts filed with the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the first day of February, 1899, and that such contracts should have resulted in the actual construction of the vessel, or in her having been under construction in accordance with the contract on or before the 1st day of January, 1900, to come within the provisions of the bill.

An amendment to section 10 requires that:

All fittings and machinery forming a part of the construction of the vessels built in the United States under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, provided they can be obtained in this country.

FAVOR THE METRIC SYSTEM.

Committee Reports a Bill to Introduce It in This Country.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The bill of Representative Shafroth of Colorado for the adoption of the metric system by the United States to-day was favorably reported by unanimous vote of the House Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures. The bill was changed so as to make the system go into effect Jan. 1, 1903. Officials of the Treasury were present to-day and expressed approval of the measure.

Mr. Shafroth stated that all the civilized nations except Great Britain and the United States had adopted the metric system, Russia being the last to do so a few weeks ago. The bill as reported provides:

That on and after Jan. 1, 1903, all the departments of the Government of the United States in the transaction of all business requiring the use of weight and measurement, except in completing the survey of public lands, shall employ and use, only the weights and measures of the metric system, and on and after Jan. 1, 1903, the weights and measures of the metric system shall be the legal standard weights and measures of and in the United States.

THE REVENUE REDUCTION BILL.

To be Reported as Introduced Except that It Will Go Into Effect On Its Passage.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The Ways and Means Committee voted to report the Revenue Reduction bill as introduced, with an amendment making the act take effect on its passage instead of thirty days thereafter. All substitutes and amendments by the minority were defeated—6 to 9.

The committee met in special session at 10 o'clock this morning. There was an unusually large attendance for an early meeting, there being but two absentees—Babcock, Republican, and Robinson, Democrat. Mr. Payne laid the bill before the committee and consideration of its details at once began. When the beer section was reached, fixing the rebate at 20 per cent. instead of 7½ per cent., which makes the rate $1.60 per barrel, Mr. Richardson, the ranking minority member, moved a further reduction of all the increase by the War Revenue act. The effect of this motion if carried would have been to make the rate $1 per barrel. The motion was defeated by a party vote.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS REPORT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The annual report of the Librarian of Congress was submitted to that body to-day. It shows that during the year there were 38,110 books and pamphlets added to the library, making a total of 995,166. Of the books added during the year 10,599 came through the operation of the copyright law. There were other accessions of 16,605 pieces of music; prints, 14,948; maps and charts, 3,536, and manuscripts, 778.

Librarian Putnam reports upon a recent visit to Europe, during which he made various purchases of importance, and he says he was able to take advantage of a favorable opportunity to secure representation in the library of both history and literature. Among the manuscripts secured during the year were 400 letters and other papers written by Harman Blennerhassett, the friend of Aaron Burr. The report also shows a material increase of foreign periodicals.

The total number of visitors to the library during the year was 655,430; of readers, 123,844; of books issued, 364,396. There were 94,798 copyright entries.

TO EXTEND THE PRESIDENT'S TERM

Plan to Make It Six Years—Seven Years for the Vice President.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The Judiciary Committee of the House has a very curious and interesting bill before it. It is a proposition to amend the Constitution introduced by Representative Sibley of Pennsylvania. It proposes that the President of the United States shall be elected for a term of six years, instead of four, and that he shall be ineligible for re-election for a second term. The Vice President, however, is to be elected and hold office for seven years, thus bringing the election for that officer in a different year from that in which the President is elected.

Mr. Sibley has also undertaken to answer the question, "What shall be done with our ex-Presidents?" He provides, by his constitutional amendment, that a President whose term of office has expired, shall be a Senator of the United States at large, ex-officio, during good behavior. In that capacity he shall not exercise the voting power, and shall receive for his services such compensation as the Congress shall by suitable legislation determine.

Politicians are wondering what would have been the effect of such a provision if it could have been in force when Buchanan ceased to be President, and when there would have been opportunity to have Buchanan, Fillmore, and perhaps two or three other contrary-minded non-voting statesmen in the Senate. If it were in force to-day Mr. Harrison and Mr. Cleveland would have the opportunity to advise the Senate on all questions, but no power to support their convictions by their votes. The proposition does not provoke serious comment in the Judiciary Committee.

It is evident that in twenty-four years there would be four elections for President and three for Vice President, and that not until the forty-second year would the elections of President and Vice President fall together.

NOMINATIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The President to-day sent the following nominations to the Senate:

He was born in York, Livingston County, in March, 1848, and was graduated from Cornell University. He went to Buffalo in 1869 and studied law in the office of A. P. Laning. Being admitted to the bar, he became a member of the firm of Laning, McMillan & Gluck, which later became Greene, McMillan & Gluck.

MORGAN DISCUSSES TREATY

Says Canal Will Be Built Even at Cost of War with the British.

Hay-Pauncefote Agreement, He Claims, Has No Especial Bearing on the Case, but He Will Vote for It.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The Senate was in executive session for more than four hours to-day, the entire time being devoted to the discussion by Senator Morgan (Dem., Ala.,) of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty for the abrogation of the portion of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty which relates to the Nicaraguan Canal.

The Senator made it very plain in the course of his remarks that, while he was not opposed to the pending treaty in almost any form, his principal, if not his only, concern in that connection is for the passage of the canal bill, and he allowed it to be very broadly understood that he had engaged in the treaty discussion because of his conviction that there were a majority of Senators who would insist upon action upon the treaty as a condition precedent to the passage of the canal bill. For this reason he said he was willing to discuss the treaty. He intimated privately to other Senators, however, that he would not consent to the fixing of a time for a vote upon the treaty until there also could be a time fixed for like action upon the Nicaraguan Canal bill.

In the course of his speech he said that he did not in reality consider that the treaty need have any especial bearing upon the bill and that he believed it was competent for the United States to proceed with the building of the canal regardless of the treaty or of Great Britain's wishes in the matter, but, to satisfy other Senators and to meet the wishes of the Secretary of State, he would consent to action upon the treaty and do all he could for it. He would vote for the agreement, whether it should be amended or not, although he would prefer that there should be no amendment.

Discussing the question of fortification of the canal, Senator Morgan argued strenuously against it, both as inexpedient and unnecessary. He contended that Great Britain was not the only power whose interests would be affected by a provision for fortification, and said that Nicaragua and Costa Rica had a right to be considered in that connection. Furthermore, in case of war everybody knew that the canal would be protected to the fullest extent, so that any provision whatever bearing upon this point was needless. He admitted, however, that he had no doubt that if the United States should proceed with the construction of the canal without first taking the steps to secure its neutrality, Great Britain would be grievously offended, and that he thought it not impossible that the offense would be considered sufficiently grave to lead to hostilities between the two countries.

"Do you mean," asked Senator Beveridge, (Rep., Ind.,) "that notwithstanding the present friendly relations between the countries England might declare war if we should construct the canal with our own means and in our own way?"

Senator Morgan replied that he considered that result among the probabilities. But, he continued, I should not be deterred by that circumstance.

What England would do, he said, was a mere matter of speculation, and he added that he had only referred to this possibility in order to emphasize his opinion that the canal should be constructed in any contingency. The American people, he said, had mapped out that canal, and they were not going to allow any obstacle, no matter how serious, to stand in the way. He believed that the Administration that would undertake to build the canal, knowing that to do so meant war, would be indorsed by the people at large by a bigger majority than that which McKinley had received over Bryan in the last election.

Senator Morgan was plied with many questions by Senators Mason, (Rep., Ill.,) Teller, (Silver Rep., Col.,) Beveridge, (Rep., Ind.,) Tillman, (Dem., S. C.,) and others. Mr. Mason asked whether it was true that if the Hay-Pauncefote negotiations prevented the use of the canal by Great Britain in time of war, the converse proposition that it also prohibited such use by the United States was not also true. To this Mr. Morgan did not make direct reply, saying that he would take up that point later in his discussion.

In discussing the points of the treaty with Senator Teller, the Alabama Senator expressed the view that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is unconstitutional, and for this reason, if for no other, said it should be disregarded.

MAY APPEALS FOR REDRESS.

Submits Affidavit to State Department Saying He Is Illegally Detained in Guatemala.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The State Department to-day received a formal protest from R. H. May, the American engineer, who was forcibly detained in Guatemala. May submits an affidavit through S. A. Witherspoon, whom he names as his attorney. Mr. Witherspoon's paper is dated at New Orleans, Dec. 4.

May says he is a citizen of Mississippi, temporarily residing in Guatemala, where an arbitration has just been determined in his favor by the British Minister. After that matter had been decided May left Guatemala City and went to Port Barrios, where on Nov. 29 he attempted to embark for New Orleans. He had appointed an attorney of record, in the person of William F. Fuqua, to represent him in the country in any judicial process against him. When he (May) was ejected from Guatemala on Oct. 28 by the military authorities, he owed his employes on the Northern Railroad about $12,000 Guatemalan money, which he was unable to pay on account of the failure of the Guatemalan Government to pay him $143,750 American gold, lately awarded to him.

One James Wilkinson sued May, and secured a writ of detention forbidding him to leave the country until his claim was settled. May says that Article 74 of Decree 273 is the only proviso under which a person can be prevented from leaving the country, yet that article permits departure when an attorney of record is appointed.

"Notwithstanding this," says May, "I was forcibly seized, pulled off the gangway of the ship, and thereby prevented from coming to the United States, and am now detained at Guatemala."

The affiant requests the State Department to demand his immediate release, and the payment to him of an indemnity of $5,000 damages "for said willful and malicious wrong."

BATTLESHIPS NOT DISABLED.

Admiral Farquhar Says the Massachusetts and Kearsage Will Sail on Dec. 20.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Admiral Farquhar, Commander in Chief of the North Atlantic Squadron, who is in Washington in consultation with the Navy Department officials, declares that there is no foundation for the reports of the disablement of the two leading battleships of his fleet, the Massachusetts and the Kearsarge. He says that in the case of the Massachusetts the presence of some water in the coffer dam was the foundation of the story that the ship was leaking badly. A disordered pump is the explanation. As to the Kearsarge, some of the bolts connecting the thirteen-inch turret gun with the device for taking up the recoil were sheared in target practice. The damage was slight. The Admiral further said that he saw no reason to change his plans for the departure of the two vessels on the regular Winter cruise on the 20th of this month.

PATRICK FILES AFFIDAVIT.

Attacks First Rice Will and Makes Charge of Forgery.

Albert T. Patrick, the lawyer who is a prisoner in the Tombs, has at last disclosed his line of attack on the first will of William Marsh Rice. Patrick in his affidavit filed yesterday practically makes a charge of forgery against witnesses to the will. He directly declares that the names of the witnesses to the will were written by one and the same person. This will gives Mr. Patrick no interest in the estate, while the second, or "Patrick will," gives him control of the greater portion of the property.

The first will was witnessed by W. O. Wetherbee of 300 Greene Avenue and William F. Harmon of 672 Putnam Avenue, Brooklyn. Mr. Wetherbee is one of the clerks in the office of Swenson & Co.

The affidavit of Mr. Patrick in opposition to this will was prepared by his counsel, Logan, Demond & Harby. After declaring that the will is not the last will of Mr. Rice, Mr. Patrick swears to the following statement:

That the said alleged will was not duly executed by the said William M. Rice, deceased; that he did not publish the same as his will in the presence of the witnesses whose names are subscribed thereto; that he did not request the said two witnesses to be witnesses thereto, and that the said alleged witnesses did not sign as witnesses in his presence or in the presence of each other, and that the said names, purporting to be the names of two witnesses subscribed to the said will, were written by the same person;

That the said paper writing was not made or executed by the said William M. Rice as his last will and testament, nor intended by him so to be, but that the said paper writing purporting to be his will was executed for an ulterior purpose, and was not intended to have any connection with or effect upon the distribution of the estate of the said William M. Rice, and that the said paper, the so-called last will and testament of William M. Rice, deceased, was procured, obtained, signed, and set forth in the words and language therein contained for a fraudulent and an ulterior purpose, and was not intended to be, and, as a matter of fact, was not executed, published, or declared as and for the last will and testament of the said William M. Rice;

That the paper propounded for probate herein is invalid as a last will and testament, and is illegal and void, and does not in any manner or degree whatever express the wishes or intention that the said William M. Rice had at the time of the signing of said paper with regard to the distribution, devising, bequeathing, or bestowing of his estate and was not intended by him to express in any manner whatever his actual or definite intention, wish, or desire with regard to his said estate.

The law firm of Hornblower, Byrne, Miller & Potter represent the executors under the first will, and they are now having experts examine the "Patrick will," so as to pass upon the signature claimed to be that of Mr. Rice.

RACE RIOT THREATENED.

Negro Who Shot Two Men Pursued by Angry Crowd—Trained Woman Nurse's Good Work.

An attempt to renew race rioting was made last night when a crowd of white persons tried to incite one another to lynch a negro at Thirty-fifth Street and Seventh Avenue. The negro is William Compton of 219 West Thirty-fifth Street. He shot William H. Case and Cornelius Rooney, both of 400 Seventh Avenue. The crowd tried to capture the negro, but the police surrounded him and hurled him to the station in West Thirty-seventh Street. The negro fired on the crowd as he was pursued. The injured men were not dangerously wounded.

Case and Rooney keep an oyster stand at Thirty-fifth Street and Seventh Avenue. Compton ordered an oyster sandwich last night and demanded that Case hand out the horse radish "in a hurry," threatening to "knock his head off" if he did not. Rooney came out from behind the counter and the negro, as soon as he saw him, drew a revolver and shot him twice in the left arm. Case rushed from behind and Compton fired a bullet into his left arm. Then he ran off as a crowd came up.

"Kill him!" "Lynch him!" were some of the cries the crowd indulged in as they ran. The negro dashed into the hall of his home, just before entering turning and firing his revolver at the crowd.

Policemen Winan and Issing came up and at once whistled for aid. Half a dozen policemen rushed up and, drawing their clubs, warned the crowd not to interfere. Then Compton, much frightened, was brought out and quickly taken to the station.

YACHT MAY BE BARRED

N. Y. Y. C. Committee Can Refuse to Recognize Boston Boat.

SITUATION HAS NO PRECEDENT

Yachtsmen Discuss the Announcement of Thomas W. Lawson's Willingness to Build a Cup Defender.

Gossip among local yachtsmen regarding the forthcoming international races for the America's Cup was given a new lease of life yesterday by the announcement that Thomas W. Lawson, either independently or as the head of a Boston syndicate, had under consideration the building of a yacht which would be offered as a competitor of the New York Yacht Club syndicate's Herreshoff boat for the privilege of defending the cup. This unexpected entrance of a new aspirant, after plans for the defense had been completed by the Cup Committee of the New York Yacht Club, was productive of a greater sensation among yachtsmen than any announcement since the receipt of Sir Thomas's challenge. Approval and gratification at the prospect of real rivalry in the trial races on this side of the Atlantic were at first generally expressed. The keener the competition for the honor of defending the cup, it was argued, the less likelihood would there be of the determined challenger's success. As the situation was talked over, however, it became apparent that the tardy resolution of the Bostonians was not unqualifiedly felicitous, and that the prospect of a non-member of the New York Yacht Club voluntarily presenting himself as a candidate for the responsibility of the cup's defense has given the special committee of the club a new question to settle.

Mr. Lawson is not a member of the New York Yacht Club. His name was some time ago presented for membership at both the New York and Eastern Yacht Clubs, but was withdrawn before the election took place. His big steam yacht, the Dreamer, flies only the signal of the Hull-Massachusetts Yacht Club. Never before in the history of the International races has there been presented at the trial races as a candidate for the defense a yacht that was not enrolled in the fleet of the New York Yacht Club. In 1886, 1887, and 1893 the committee in charge of the plans for the defense invited competition in the trial races, and several aspirants were entered on each occasion. Among the competitors were Boston boats, but their owners were members of the New York Yacht Club. A sort of precedent or tradition has accordingly grown up which has hitherto restricted ambitions for defending the cup to members of the club which holds the trophy as its trustees.

In the deed of gift of the America's Cup, however, there is nothing to restrict the defense to a New York Yacht Club boat. The deed states specifically that the defending boat need not be named or indicated in the acceptance of a challenge, and all plans for the defense are in the absence of provision in the deed left to the New York Yacht Club as the Trustees of the cup. At the special meeting of the club in October, at which Sir Thomas's challenge was formally accepted, a resolution was passed conferring full power for arranging the details of the defense to a special cup committee, composed of nine officers and prominent members of the club. This committee, headed by Commodore Lewis Cass Ledyard, has arbitrary power in the selection of the yacht that will sail against the challenger, Shamrock II. Upon this point it is hedged by no binding precedent or provision in the deed of gift. It may accept or reject any candidate.

Commodore Ledyard, when asked yesterday what he knew of the plans of Mr. Lawson or other Boston yachtsmen as to the building of a defender, replied that his only information was obtained from the newspapers. When asked what would be the action of the Cup Committee if the proposed Boston boat is presented at the trial races, he said:

"I really don't know now. Pray for inspiration, I suppose."

Other members of the committee were unwilling to talk upon the subject until something more definite had been accomplished by the Boston yachtsmen and the committee had some conference upon the situation. One officer of the club, who is also a member of the committee, however, affirmed the power of the committee to select or reject any boat offered as a candidate for the defense.

W. Butler Duncan, Jr., who is to manage the new defender building at the Herreshoffs' for the local syndicate, said yesterday that he knew nothing whatever of the prospect of rival defender candidates appearing in the trial races.

"The more the merrier," he continued, smilingly. "All I have to do is to get the best out of the boat under my care in the trial races. The Cup Committee must decide as to which is the best boat for the races against the Shamrock II."

Among yachtsmen in this city it is believed that the model to which Mr. Lawson apparently pins his faith is that of a ninety-foot sloop which B. B. Crowninshield, the young Boston marine architect, is reported to have designed upon his own responsibility. It was at first suggested that Clinton H. Crane or Messrs. Gardner & Cox of this city had prepared the model which Mr. Lawson referred to in the interview printed yesterday in THE NEW YORK TIMES. The local designers, however, denied any knowledge of the proposed yacht.

Bowdoin B. Crowninshield was born in this city thirty-three years ago, but he is a member of the old Boston Crowninshield family that has been prominent in merchant shipping annals for more than a century. Crowninshield himself has lived in Boston and Marblehead since a boy, and long before he took up yacht designing with his brother Frank had gained a wide reputation as a racing amateur. He was graduated from Harvard College in 1890, and later took special engineering courses at the Lawrence Scientific School and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He had dabbled in yacht designing almost all his life, and five years ago entered the employ of Purdon, the Boston designer. On Jan. 1, 1897, he opened an office of his own, and has since gained a wide reputation among racing yachtsmen. He has been particularly successful with sloops of the thirty-foot and twenty-five-foot classes, and with the raceabouts. His Jolly Roger last season won the championship in the raceabout class. All of his boats have been of a normal type, his preference running to the beamy, keel craft. Although he has not yet turned out a racing yacht of the larger class, he has designed many swift fishing schooners.

Raceabout Building at City Island.

CITY ISLAND, N. Y., Dec. 6.—A new cruising raceabout is under construction at the Jacob yard, this place, for E. H. Weatherbee, designed by Messrs. A. Cary Smith and Henry G. Barbey. The dimensions are 42 feet 9 inches over all, 28 feet water line, 11 feet beam, and 4 feet draught, fitted with a centreboard and a knockabout rig. The new boat will be fitted with modern conveniences, and used principally to cruise in the waters of Long Island Sound in the vicinity of Larchmont. The models of the yacht have already been finished, and the setting up of the keel and frame will soon be completed.

Harlem Y. C. Elects Officers.

The Harlem Yacht Club elected the following officers, to serve during 1901, at the annual meeting held last night in the club's town house, 519 East One Hundred and Twenty-first Street: Commodore—Lorenz Zeller; Vice Commodore—William G. Ringler; Rear Commodore—Christopher Brinnock; Recording Secretary—James F. Proctor; Financial Secretary—S. E. Schilder; Treasurer—John Moerling; Measurer—John Wimming; Fleet Surgeon—Dr. George E. Wilson. Directors—T. B. Bates, H. H. Andrews, F. C. Sullivan, and J. Symmers. Membership Committee—R. Evans, A. M. Stebbins, and L. Lalor.

INTERCOLLEGIATE HOCKEY.

Contrary to the general expectation of those who have followed the progress of intercollegiate hockey this season, Cornell did not apply for membership in the league at the organization meeting of the association in the St. Nicholas Rink last evening. A surprise was furnished in the request of the University of Pennsylvania for admission to the league. After some discussion the Quaker College was granted full membership, bringing up the number of participants in the struggle for the intercollegiate championship to five—Yale, Columbia, Brown, Princeton, and Pennsylvania. Applications to join the league were received from Swarthmore and Haverford, but it was decided to refuse them.

The members of the Executive Committee agreed upon a one-round schedule, which will necessitate five games for each seven, with a total of ten contests in the series. Eight of the games will be played in the St. Nicholas Rink, and the other two in the Ice Palace, at Philadelphia. This policy does away with contests in the Brooklyn Rink.

The first game will be on Jan. 12 at New York, between the sevens of Brown and Princeton. The second contest follows at Philadelphia on Jan. 18, between the Quakers and Brown.

Adherents of the Columbia seven will not see their team play until Jan. 26, when they meet the Tigers, and after that not until Feb. 16, when they line up with Yale. Columbia will not play any of the championship games outside of New York. After the final game, on March 2, the two teams which have the highest record on a percentage basis of games won and lost will meet in a series of three contests to decide first place. The local season in hockey will be opened to-morrow night with a game between Yale and the St. Nicholas Skating Club.

The schedule adopted last night:

TROTTING FRAUDS PUNISHED.

A Dyed Horse One of the Curious Tricks Exposed by Reviewing Board.

Michael Finn, trotting turfman, of Ilion, N. Y., went on record as a ruled off man yesterday at the third day's session of the National Trotting Association's Board of Review, a culminating calamity for Finn that proved his affinity with misfortune. The Board of Review had much business on hand, most of this concerning "ringers," or horses that were raced fraudulently in names other than their own, but the entire docket did not show anything which could even approach the story of bad luck which the Ilion man is telling.

Officially the matter taken up by the Board of Review, P. P. Johnson of Lexington, Ky., presiding, the other members, who have been present for the past few days sitting with him, was the case of E. V. Keith of Franklin Park, Me., against Michael Finn of Ilion and S. E. Pantz of New York, in connection with the bay mare Fanny M., alias Kathleen, 2:13¾.

The evidence showed that one Cox owned the mare, and sold her to Finn, who paid a small sum in cash and gave a chattel mortgage on the mare for the remainder. Then Finn mortgaged his house for $600 and bet the money on Fanny M., racing out of her class under the new name. She broke her hopples, fell, and was distanced. Finn raised more money and started his mare in another race. She won the first heat, then was recognized and sent to the stable, and Finn himself was sent before the Board of Review to be ruled off. Finn is credited with having declared his intention to quit racing, as it had proved to be entirely too precarious as a regular business. S. E. Pantz, his partner and trainer, was expelled with him.

C. A. Moore of Auburn, N. Y., and George R. Johnson of Mexico, Mo., and the bay gelding Harry A. Gill, formerly J. F. Tim (2:14¼,) were expelled for another case of ringing, attempted in Westfield, Mass. In connection with the same horse, Alfred Lathrop, alias F. Pierce, of Canandalgua, N. Y., and C. E. Rose of Rochester, N. Y., were expelled for racing the animal under the additional names Kenmore and Ragon in their operations with him. Cases against C. L. Wilder of Syracuse and E. S. Stetson of Palmyra, N. Y., in connection with the same horse were dismissed. Another charge of ringing was made out against John Albaugh, alias John Miller, alias John H. Swishard, alias J. M. Thomas of Ossge, Iuwa, and J. B. Pierce and H. A. Pennock of Toronto, Ohio, in connection with the interchanging of names for the pacer The Scrapper, 2:20¼, for Roxmont, Walnut, and Harry A. All were expelled from the turf except Pennock.

There was a spice of novelty in the case of the bay pacer Prince H., who, by means of dyes, was transformed into a chestnut horse, and went into a green class straight from a record of 2:16¼. In connection with the change of color, which left the horse supposedly identified as F. R. R., Robert Shaeffer and F. R. Bassett of Albany, N. Y., and E. A. Lefebre of St. Reml, Penn., were expelled from the association.

Another rather singular case was that of the substitution of the horse Tom Tucker, 2:18, who raced as "ringer" under the name Fielder in the place of the original Fielder, a stallion, bought and controlled by the men who had Tom Tucker. This bit of enterprise caused an order which expels from the turf under the National Trotting Association Pliny Burnham of Canton, N. Y., and Thomas Woods of Detroit.

H. Blake did not appear to answer charges made against him, but a statement to the Judges of the meeting at Old Orchard, Me., where Blake's offense was committed, was made public. Blake started a horse under the name Pure Gart, but the officials identified the animal as Marvel T., 2:22½. When Blake was called up he explained that his wife did not like the name Marvel T., and so he had renamed his horse. Blake is under suspension until he pays the fees that should be paid for changing a horse's name.

The board will continue in session to-day.

New England Horse Breeders Meet.

BOSTON, Dec. 6.—The annual meeting of the New England Trotting Horse Breeders' Association was held in the American House to-day. These Directors were elected:

J. Malcolm Forbes, John E. Thayer, Charles Whittemore, Charles S. Rackemann, John B. Graham, C. W. Lassell, H. O. Aldrich, F. G. Hall, and George Van Dyke. Frank J. Hall was elected Treasurer and C. M. Jewett clerk. Three meetings, aggregating thirteen days of racing, were given during last season for purses aggregating $34,370.

The total of purses this year was greater by $16,000 than that of the Kentucky Breeders' Association, the organization's greatest contemporary.

Golf Honors Lost by Delay.

The golf championship of the Morris Country Golf Club, near Morristown, N. J., will not be decided this season and the cup will remain in possession of the committee until the regular championship contest in the Spring. The reason for this peculiar state of affairs is due to the fact that the two championship survivors, James A. Tyng and Howard A. Colby, were unable to fix upon a day to play the final round before the closing of the links. The Morris County Club makes it an invariable rule to close its links by the first of December.

The committee has refused to sanction another date, and the club will therefore remain without an acknowledged champion until the next contest in the Spring. The Morris County links and house will be closed absolutely until the end of April or the first week of May. The nine-hole course of the Morristown Field Club will remain open all Winter, and the Baltusrol course, near Short Hills, will also be open, so there will be plenty of opportunities for practice in that locality.

Golf Notes of Interest.

The Yountakah Country Club of Nutley will keep its links open all Winter, only temporary greens will soon be substituted for the regular ones. A series of club concerts has also been arranged to be held at weekly intervals during the Winter.

The Innis Arden Golf Club, which is chiefly composed of the Summer residents along the Long Island shore below Stamford, has just elected the following officers for the coming year: President—William B. Strong; Vice President—Edwin J. Lucas; Secretary—James K. Hoyt; Treasurer—Eugene R. Washburne; Captain—William B. Strong; Governors—Frederick W. Tuttle, Frederick Topping, E. Hope Norton, Ralph P. Hinchman, and James W. White.

The St. Louis Athletic Association opened 9 holes of its future 18-hole course on Thanksgiving Day. W. C. McCreery, who is champion of the club, had the honor of driving the first ball, and he played the 9 holes in 57 strokes. This new course makes the third golf links in St. Louis, but a fourth club is laying out a course to be opened next Spring. James Mackrell, who was a former professional in Boston and later was stationed for two or three seasons at the Palmetto Golf Club, Aiken, S. C., is the professional now at the St. Louis Country Club.

A special meeting of the Harbor Hill Golf Club has been called for next Tuesday evening at the First National Bank, St. George, S. I., to consider the policy of the club in relation to the Board of Trustees and the finances of the club. Considerable opposition regarding the club management has been found by several members, and those who have demanded the special meeting to straighten out matters are W. E. Allum, W. H. Davidge, Austin P. Kelley, Paul B. Cooke, C. E. Baldwin, Percy R. King, John A. Merton, C. H. White, A. B. Lowson, J. Harvey Bostwick, and F. B. Royal.

NO LICENSE FOR SLOAN

LESTER REIFF EXONERATED

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The Racing Calendar to-day announces that Lester Reiff, the American jockey, has been exonerated of the charge of pulling Richard Croker's horse, The Scotchman II., at Doncaster.

Tod Sloan, it is added, has been informed that he need not apply for a license for next season.

The following is the text of the announcement in The Racing Calendar:

"It having been reported to the Stewards of the Jockey Club that Sloan had accepted an offer of a large present from F. Gardiner in the event of Codoman winning the Cambridgeshire, and that he bet on the race, they inquired into the case. Mr. Gardiner, who was not aware of the regulation forbidding such presents, expressed great regret at having transgressed, and the Stewards, fully accepting his explanation, fined him a nominal penalty, £25. They inflicted a similar fine on C. A. Mills, who acted as commissioner for Mr. Gardiner.

"Finding both charges proved against Sloan, they informed him that he need not apply for a license to ride.

"The Stewards inquired into the running of Geroistein and The Scotchman II. at Liverpool. A number of witnesses, including both jockeys, were examined. The inquiry was extended to other horses ridden by L. Reiff. The Stewards decided that no suspicion whatever attached to Rickaby, and they also completely exonerated L. Reiff from blame.

"After having examined witnesses, who included the habitual backers of American jockeys, their banking accounts, and betting books, which they desired to inspect, and which were freely placed at the Stewards' disposal, the Stewards further declare there is no reason to suppose Reiff betted or received unauthorized presents.

"The Stewards further decided that no blame attached to the owner or trainer of The Scotchman II. A number of vague rumors inquired into were proved to be unfounded.

Richard Croker's horse The Scotchman II., with Lester Reiff in the saddle, defeated Lord Durham's Geroistein at Liverpool Nov. 9, after having been badly beaten previously by Geroistein at Doncaster. The local Stewards at Liverpool Nov. 10 summoned Wishard, the trainer, and Reiff for an explanation of the Doncaster running, and they eventually decided to refer the matter to the Stewards of the Jockey Club, with the result just made public by The Racing Calendar of London.

LITTLE SYMPATHY FOR SLOAN.

The decision of the Jockey Club was almost the only subject of conversation at the Beaufort, Victoria, and other sporting clubs this evening. The adverse decision in the case of "Tod" Sloan came as a total surprise to the racing world, as it did to his closest followers.

So little favor did Sloan himself have of his ability to race here next year that he left nearly all his personal possessions in London.

Mr. Croker's friends are much pleased at his exoneration, as well as that of Wishard and Lester Reiff, and the decision was immediately wired to him at Carlsbad.

It appears that Sloan's arrangements with the Prince of Wales came about through F. Gardiner, but that the friends of the Prince in the Jockey Club, having a foreboding of trouble, saved him from the humiliation of engaging a disqualified jockey.

The concensus of sporting opinion in London this evening is that Sloan has to thank the clique of undesirable persons whom he allowed himself to be identified with in England.

Codoman, it will be remembered, was the French horse upon which Sloan won an important race in France, and the animal was brought to England to run in the Cambridgeshire. Sloan's faith in Codoman's ability resulted in the formation of one of the largest pools of the season.

The Sportsman will say to-morrow:

"Lester Reiff may be said, in the fullest sense of the words, to have left the course without a stain on his character. There are few of us who will not be thoroughly delighted with this result, for he has made himself immensely popular here by his uniformly modest and unassuming conduct, and he will doubtless be a greater favorite than ever next season."

Reiff's manner seems to appear inclined to exult over a man who is down, we cannot help saying that the curt intimation to Sloan gives almost as much satisfaction as the triumphant acquittal of Reiff. Nobody denies that Sloan is a very fine horseman, but little else can be said in his favor. His manners are far from admirable, and he appears to regard himself as the equal, if not the superior, of his employers. He ought never to have been allowed to ride here after his disgraceful conduct at Ascot in 1899."

J. Tod Sloan, the American jockey mentioned in the cable report of the English Jockey Club's plans for next season, left New York last night for Chicago, on his way to San Francisco, after a stay in New York of about three weeks. He was found in the Victoria Hotel just before his departure by a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday afternoon. In answer to questions concerning the statement that the Jockey Club of England had informed him that he need not apply for a license to ride, Sloan said:

"I have received no notice from the Jockey Club, and I knew nothing about the action of the Stewards in the matter. They had plenty of time to inform me of the action they are said to have taken, but when I left England no information concerning the plans of the Jockey Club had reached me. I have no knowledge of what the Jockey Club intends to do, and I feel satisfied that there is some misunderstanding concerning the matter. Until the Jockey Club has sent me notification of what is intended I can say nothing about the reported action."

Sloan declined to discuss his plans for the Winter, and would only say that he was going to Chicago on his way to San Francisco. He would not say whether or not he expected to ride in California.

The offense Sloan is alleged to have committed, described as that of having accepted presents from persons other than the owners of horses he rode, is specifically named in the racing rules of both England and America. This provision of the rules of racing was applied in the case of "Riley" Grannan, the race track plunger and bookmaker, who was ruled off the Jockey Club tracks in New York three years ago, the only difference in the case being that Grannan gave presents to jockeys, while Sloan is said to have accepted them. Fred Taral, the jockey who accepted the present in Grannan's case, was excused and punished only by a fine, because he pleaded ignorance of the rules. In the English Jockey Club's ruling the penalties are reversed, the giver of the present being fined, while from the reading of the ruling in his case, it seems that Sloan is to be deprived of his license as a jockey on the English tracks.

SEVEN RACES AT BENNINGS.

Four Favorites Won and Two Long Shots Landed Home First.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—A card of seven races, in four of which the fields were of generous proportions, furnished the sport at the Benning track to-day. Favorites took the money in four of the events, and two outsiders passed under the wire first. Federalist, the favorite, took the first easily by six lengths. In this race Impartial, who was well backed, and Grey Bill Higgins, both fell. Their jockeys, McDermott and Ryan, escaped serious injury.

Sacket, at 30 to 1, took the steeplechase, the favorite finishing last. The Rogue, at 20 to 1, won the fifth by six lengths. Termless went to the post a strong favorite in this race, but when half way around his saddle girth broke and Jockey McCue was thrown to the ground. There were four starters in the handicap, Kinnikinic winning easily, with Decanter, the favorite, last. Summaries:

WATERTOWN BEAT OGDENSBURG.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Dec. 6.—The Northern New York championship football game between the Ogdensburg and Watertown elevens was played at Glen Park this afternoon and was won by Watertown by the score of 23 to 0.

It was the annual contest between the Watertown Athletic Association and the Ogdensburg Athletic Club, and is considered the event of the season. Bitter rivalry is maintained the year round between these two elevens. Special trains were run on the railroads from all Northern New York towns, bringing crowds to the city. Over 5,000 people were in attendance at the game, a thousand or more coming from Ogdensburg on a special train. Business in general was suspended here and $10,000 was wagered on the game. The game was played on a field from which a foot of snow was scraped.

In the first ten minutes of the game Ogdensburg had slightly the better of it. Watertown's team work was poor. Then Watertown got down to business, and their team work became faultless. They pounded Ogdensburg's line and ran the ends at will, and in four minutes more Storey, Watertown's right half, was sent around left end for a touch-down.

In the second half Watertown had things its own way. Gordon went through for two touch-downs and Simpson one. Gordon's second touch-down was made from Ogdensburg's five-yard line, where Storey had placed it by an 18-yard run on a trick play. Gordon kicked every goal but one. The line-up:

Metzger	Centre	Amo
McCormick	Right guard	Graveline
Edghill	Right tackle	Leary
Putnam	Right end	Doyle
Storey	Right half	B. McElligott Cunningham.
Gordon	Full back	Tallman
C. M. Rice	Quarter back	Denny

Touch-downs—Storey, Gordon, (2,) Campson. Goals—Gordon, 3. Officials—H. A. Durston and Louis Hinkey, Yale. Time—Thirty-minute halves.

N. Y. U. Sophomores Win.

The New York University sophomore eleven defeated the freshmen by a score of 13 to 5 in the annual inter-class football game played on Ohio Field yesterday afternoon. The sophomores scored a safety at the outset of the game, but it was not until after fifteen minutes of play that Moore was shoved through the freashman line for a touch-down. Connelly then kicked an easy goal. The 1904 men were unable to score in the first half. The second half was more evenly contested. Each team scored one touch-down, but neither was able to kick goal.

A lively scrimmage between the partisans of the two classes was started during the intermission, but police interference soon brought the rush to an end. Trouble broke out afresh at the close of the game, when the freshmen attempted to give their yell. The sophomores rushed, and once again the members of the two classes were scattered, wrestling in pairs, over the field. No decision was reached, as the police again interfered. In the evening the sophomores celebrated their victory in the traditional fashion. They kidnapped a number of the freshmen, and, marching them to Ohio Field, compelled them to recite the story of the game. The other members of their class came to their assistance, and for the third time a battle ensued, finally ending with a sophomore victory.

The football game, which had been arranged between the Law and the Medical Schools of Columbia University, has been declared off. The game was to have been held at Manhattan Field, but Columbia's lease of the property expired Dec. 1, and the owners refused the use of the field for this event.

AMATEUR BILLIARD TOURNEY.

Charles G. Schmitt of the Chicago Athletic Association and Edwin O. Presby were the winners of the two games played yesterday in the National Class B billiard tournament now in progress under the sanction of the Amateur Athletic Union at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club. The attendance yesterday was larger than at any previous games of the tourney, many ladies being among the spectators of the evening games.

Mr. Schmitt defeated Florian Tobias by a score of 300 to 247 in their match last night. Although the game was rather slow, sixty-nine innings being required, it was the most interesting of the series. Spectacular plays abounded, and the result was in doubt up to the last few innings. Mr. Schmitt led up to the forty-third inning, when a string of goose eggs on his own part and a beautiful run of 33 points by Mr. Tobias reversed the advantage and left the score 175 to 168 in the latter's favor. It was just ten innings later that a run of 13 put the Chicagoan five points in the lead. Mr. Tobias's play then grew very ragged and he dropped steadily further behind his opponent. Mr. Schmitt not play quite so steady a game as he did in his match with Isaac Mannes, but both he and his opponent scored some remarkably difficult shots. Two massé shots by Mr. Schmitt were especially brilliant. Mr. Tobias played a closer game than he has ever been known to exhibit before in a tournament. The defeat of Mr. Tobias yesterday caused his withdrawal from the tourney, while Mr. Schmitt was thereby qualified for the final round. The scores:

Schmitt—2 2 5 1 15 12 0 1 4 0 0 4 1 1 2 20 1 0 0 16 29 1 0 4 1 2 6 1 1 0 0 6 5 9 9 0 1 3 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 13 2 10 2 13 0 4 13 1 2 12 3 11 3 15 0 5 1 0 11 8. Total, 300; average, 4 24-69; high runs, 20 and 29.

Tobias—0 13 0 15 0 1 1 1 0 0 1 0 7 0 0 1 3 1 4 9 4 4 7. 1 1 3 7 1 4 1 4 4 1 3 2 0 4 0 0 0 2 5 1 5 0 6 3 3 1 0 2 9 3 2 6 3 1 0 1 0 9 12 8 0 0 2 1 7 0 0 6 0 0 10. Total, 247; average, 3 43-88; high run, 33.

Mr. Presby's defeat of S. G. Estabrook in the afternoon match caused the latter to drop out of the tournament. The game was slow, occupying seventy-two innings, but Mr. Presby's spectacular open style of play made it an interesting one to spectators. Mr. Presby made a run of 39 points in the sixty-fifth inning, coming within one point of Isaac A. Mannes's run of 40, which is the highest yet made in the tournament. The scores:

Presby—0 6 5 2 1 2 9 18 1 1 3 0 0 2 5 8 3 0 3 10 3 1 1 1 2 1 2 0 0 13 0 4 0 1 2 2 1 0 7 4 2 0 5 5 5 2 2 9 0 3 4 0 0 2 26 5 0 1 4 2 0 4 19 39 9 0 18 0 0 2 0 10. Total, 300. Average, 4 12-12. High runs, 26 and 39.

Estabrook—0 7 5 8 0 1 1 2 1 0 13 0 0 4 0 0 0 3 0 0 0 4 1 24 10 5 4 0 2 0 1 1 3 3 1 2 0 0 6 0 0 0 4 3 1 1 2 0 1 6 4 0 0 13 1 6 1 4 0 0 2 7 2 3 14 3 11 2 3 1. Total, 210. Average, 2 68-71. High run, 24.

A 14-inch balk line being used.

The last two games of the qualifying round will be played to-day. A. D. Ferguson of this city will meet William Paige of Boston this afternoon, and Frank Billiter, the Minneapolis champion, will play Edwin O. Presby of this city to-night. The final round of the tournament will begin to-morrow.

Graham Won at Billiards.

Harry Graham defeated Raoul Pictet last night by a score of 200 to 165 in the scheduled game of the amateur novice billiard tournament now in progress at Maurice Daly's Academy. Dr. Graham averaged 2 50-75, with a high run of 17 points. Mr. Pictet's average was 2 13-75, and his best string one of 15 points. The two games to be played to-day will close the tournament. Charles Roder will play Mr. Pictet this afternoon, and J. E. Lewis will meet Mr. Roder to-night. First place in the tournament will probably go to the winner of to-night's game.

THE DAVIS AMENDMENT.

In reply to the questions of Senator LINDSAY, Senator LODGE explained during the executive session on Wednesday that the Davis amendment to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was substantially in the language of Article 10 of the Constantinople treaty, guaranteeing the neutrality of the Suez Canal, and might be expected to serve the purposes intended to be served by that article in respect to the Suez waterway.

The amendment and Article 10 are in purpose and in language as wide as the poles asunder. We do not see how Senator LODGE could have fallen into the grave error of saying that they were substantially the same. Article 10 of the Constantinople treaty gives to the Sultan of Turkey and the Khédive of Egypt the right, notwithstanding the prohibitions of the treaty, to take measures for the defense of Egypt—that is, for the defense of the canal itself, of which the control could be secured only by attacking Egypt. The Davis amendment to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty gives the Washington Government the right to take such measures in reference to the canal as it may find necessary for the defense of the United States. That is, if we are at war we may close the canal against our enemy, even though he may not have attempted to violate the neutrality of it. Article 10 was inserted the more effectually to insure the inviolability of the Constantinople treaty. The Davis amendment was drawn and submitted as an offering to anti-English sentiment and that part of the American public that demands the construction of an isthmian canal primarily as a military undertaking, with full liberty for the United States to make defensive and offensive use of it in its own wars and to forbid its use to the enemy. That is not neutrality. The amendment is completely at variance with the spirit and intent of the treaty, and is well known to be so by all the enemies of that convention.

This can be made plain in a few words. The first seven articles of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty have been closely modeled on the corresponding articles of the Constantinople convention of 1888, by which the great powers established and confirmed the complete neutrality of the Suez Canal. "The maritime canal of Suez shall be forever free and open, in time of war as in time of peace, to all ships of commerce or of war, without distinction of flag." So reads the first section of the Constantinople treaty. This is the fourth article: "The maritime canal remaining open in time of war, as a free way, even to ships of war of belligerents, according to the terms of Article 1 of the present treaty, the high contracting parties agree that no right of war, nor any act of hostility or act having for its purpose the obstruction of the free navigation of the canal shall be permitted in the canal and its ports of access nor within a radius of three marine miles of those ports, even though the Ottoman Empire may be one of the belligerent powers."

The succeeding articles, drawn in the same spirit, contain further express prohibitions of acts of war along the waterway, and then provision is made for the enforcement of the terms of the treaty in Articles 9 and 10, which we here quote:

> The Egyptian Government, within the limits of its powers as conferred by firmans, and of the conditions prescribed by the present treaty, will take the measures necessary to give effect to the said treaty.
> In the event that the Egyptian Government should not have the necessary means at its disposal, it will appeal to the Imperial Ottoman Government, which will take the steps necessary to respond to the appeal, give notice to the other powers signatory to the agreement of March 17, 1885, and, if need be, confer with them on the subject.
> The provisions of Articles 4, 5, 7, and 8 shall not forbid the measures taken in virtue of the present article.
> Article 10—Likewise, the provisions of Articles 4, 5, 7, and 8 shall not forbid the measures that his Majesty the Sultan and his Highness the Khédive, in the name of his Imperial Majesty and within the limitations of the firmans granted, shall be under the necessity of taking to assure, by their own forces, the defense of Egypt and the maintenance of public order.

Two further sections of Article 10 provide for notice to the Powers and declare that the treaty shall not interfere with the right of the Sultan to defend his possessions beyond the Red Sea. But then follows Article 11, brief but important:

> The measures which shall be taken in the cases provided for in Articles 9 and 10 of the present treaty must not constitute an obstacle to the free use of the canal.
> In these cases, moreover, the erection of permanent fortifications constructed in violation of Article 8 is forbidden.

Now it is evident that if the Davis amendment had been intended as an incorporation, by way of afterthought, of the substance and meaning of Article 10 of the Suez treaty, it would have provided that nothing in the instrument should be construed to forbid the United States to take measures for the defense of Nicaragua from any attack that threatened the integrity and neutrality of the canal. That is the intent of Article 10. That article does not give the Sultan authority to close the canal whenever he thinks its closing is required for the defense of Turkey. It is Egypt, the country through which the canal passes, that is to be defended. Egypt is really in the control of England and has been for years, but would the Powers have signed the Constantinople treaty if it had permitted England to close the canal when that step was deemed necessary for her own defense?

Senator LODGE says that the Davis amendment would not permit us to fortify the canal, but it would permit us to send a warship to each port of entrance to "plug it up" whenever we thought such a proceeding necessary "for the defense of the United States." This alters the treaty from a convention providing for absolute neutrality to one providing that no nation but ours shall exercise rights of war in or near the canal. England is friendly, and she does not appear to attach great importance to the canal matter. She might accept the treaty even when thus amended out of semblance to its original form and spirit. But what other power would assent to a convention so wholly one-sided? By assenting and subscribing to its stipulations they would cut themselves off from the privilege of shutting up the canal against our warships in case of war between any one of them and ourselves, while expressly conceding to us the right to shut it against them. It would be insulting to send such a treaty around for signatures.

The treaty may pass with this amendment, and England may good-naturedly accept it. But it would be just as well for Senators not to try to fool other Senators and the public as to the true meaning and intent of the Davis amendment.

OUR SUCCESS IN CHINA.

We can readily believe that, as the Washington dispatches have reported, there was rejoicing in the State Department over the announcement that all the Powers represented in China had come to our terms respecting the treatment of that country. Most Chinese news is so doubtful that it is prudent to wait for a few days to have the first announcements confirmed, but there seems to be no reason to distrust the authenticity of this announcement. It is, indeed, not Chinese news, but news from the capitals of Europe. The purport of it is simply that the Powers, even those of them who had made proposals incompatible with our views, and endeavored to have them accepted as joint ultimata, have come to see, and admit, that the United States saw earlier and further than they into the Chinese millstone. Nothing but the "logic of events" could have convinced them of this. The temptation to disparage our diplomacy is very strong in Europe. Even in the British Islands, where we are better understood than elsewhere, our course has been imputed to sympathy with the Chinese malefactors, though it has been simply a reduction to practice of the principles announced by Lord SALISBURY at the Lord Mayor's banquet. On the Continent the misinterpretation has been wilder still. An interesting and well-informed Austrian newspaper announced, in the same issue which must have contained the announcements that American counsels had prevailed, that the explanation of our presuming to hold opinions upon international matters at all was simply the result of the remissness of Europe "in allowing this giant of the wild West to growl and show his teeth."

Our position has simply been that we should demand and enforce all the reparation for the outrages upon foreigners that the Chinese Government had permitted, which could be enforced, short of calling upon that Government to commit suicide, and leave us to deal with anarchy. That would have been the effect of the unmitigated German proposals designating the most powerful men in China to be delivered up for capital punishment by the Chinese Government, that is to say, by themselves, like so many burghers of Calais. We do not attach very much importance to the sarcastic inquiry of The London Times whether it is the Powers or China which are to decide how much the Government of China can afford to do. The Powers are represented on the spot by intelligent and experienced agents. They have the means of putting effective pressure on the Chinese Government to consent to anything short of its own annihilation. There need be no doubt that that power will be used. It is not from tenderness for the Chinese Government, but from regard to the awful consequences of displacing it, that our Government has taken, in this matter, its own line, to which the progress of events has brought the other Governments. The effective punishment of China has been brought much nearer, by the efforts of the State Department, than it could have been brought by any number of savage and inhuman "punitive expeditions" projected to show the Chinese the superiority of Christian civilization.

A HOME INDUSTRY THAT NEEDS PROTECTION.

There was in President MCKINLEY'S message one statement of principle as to taxation so sound, so pertinent to the actual situation in many industries, and so full of wise and pointed suggestion to Congress, that it should be written above the chair of the presiding officer of each house. If Congress intends to heed it, the inscription might be in gold. If not, it might properly be in brass. Referring to the reduction of taxation made proper by the enormous surplus in the Treasury, the President advocated "the remission of those taxes which experience has shown to be the most burdensome to the industries of the people."

Let us call attention to one application of this principle that is demanded by every consideration of justice and practical common sense. It will be admitted that the making of newspapers is peculiarly an industry of the people, and that it is and necessarily must be a wholly American industry. It is devoted to the supply of a demand that is strictly domestic and popular. Its product can neither be imported nor exported. It is of home manufacture and home consumption. The labor it employs in all its branches is home labor. But while this industry is essentially of the sort that the protectionists profess especially to foster, it is quite beyond the reach of any advantage from tariff duties, since there is no possible foreign competition to be prevented or reduced by those duties. In these circumstances it would seem perfectly plain that at least this industry should not be injured by the tariff. It is, however, seriously and continuously injured by the taxes on its raw material, and on the material from which that is manufactured. Under the present tariff the tax on paper suitable for newspapers is $6 per ton, and the mechanically ground wood pulp from which that paper can be made is taxed $1.67 per ton. The inevitable result is that the manufacturers of paper can and do maintain the prices agreed on among themselves, quite safe from any check imposed by the fear of competition from imported paper or from new factories using imported pulp. Of this arbitrary power of monopoly, conferred by legislation, they have made and are making relentless use at the cost and to the injury of the purely home industry of newspaper making.

There are more kinds of folly involved in the legislative policy here described than can be analyzed in any one article. We shall call attention to only one of them to-day, and that is the utter violation of all the accepted principles of protectionist doctrine. The manufacture of the kind of paper suitable for newspapers is, in the first place, devoted entirely to the production of material for other manufactures. That product cannot be directly consumed. It must be employed for the creation of other products. Whatever tends to add to its price must tend to increase the cost of the product made from it, and is in the nature of a direct tax on the second product. In this case, the second product is directly consumed and is not the material for another industry. Any addition to its cost cannot be transferred to the next set of purchasers. The unnecessary cost of paper thus falls on publishers, and limits their business for the sole advantage of the paper makers. There are very few instances of this sort even in the present ill-adjusted tariff. The tax on paper and on pulp for paper is, therefore, a distinct hindrance to a purely American industry, for which there is not and can not be any corresponding compensation in the tariff. Such a palpable violation of real protection would have been scouted by the fathers of the system.

In the next place, the paper industry has notoriously reached that stage of advanced prosperity at which all the advocates of protection agree that protection should be withdrawn, having plainly accomplished all that justified its original imposition. Not only has the American paper industry the full enjoyment of the home market, which it is the sole object of protection to insure, but it is able to compete in foreign markets with the rivals against whom protection is accorded. Paper of the sort used in books and newspapers is no longer imported. The duty is absolutely prohibitory. It is, on the contrary, exported in considerable and profitable amounts. The American makers not only supply the home market entirely and ship their product to Australia and Japan to compete with the foreign manufacturers, but they actually compete in the markets of Great Britain with the British, Swedish, and German manufacturers. How large is the business done with foreign countries is shown by the statistics given in the report of the bureau just published for the ten months ending with October. Last year the exports of printing paper for these ten months were 78,821,445 pounds; this year the same exports were 95,213,771 pounds.

We submit in the light of these facts that it is a gross injustice and absurdity to continue a tax for the professed purpose of protecting an industry that needs no protection at the cost of direct and irremediable injury to another industry which gets and can get no compensating protection whatever. Here, if ever, is the case for the "remission of those taxes which experience has shown to be most burdensome to the industries of the people."

THE CHURCHES AND THE EAST SIDE.

That was a very interesting meeting at the Pro-Cathedral in Stanton Street the other evening, which was addressed by Bishop POTTER and other clergymen. The prevalence and brazenness of vice on the east side give such an assemblage, in such a place, a peculiar interest. It must have occurred to some of the speakers, as certainly it occurred to many readers of their remarks, that if there had been more institutions like the Pro-Cathedral on the east side there would have been no occasion for the present crusade.

As Mr. HEWITT said, what is needed to overthrow the power of Tammany, that is to say the power of vice, is the multiplication there of centres of civilization. The Bishop has already explained that the Pro-Cathedral is not merely a place of worship, but a place of education and a place of recreation. It is, so far as it goes, an effective rival to the saloon and the "dive." But there are by no means enough of such institutions. It would be interesting to compare the church accommodations of the east side, in proportion to population, with what they were half a century ago. The churches have followed the up-town movement of the well-to-do. Those of them which have left so much as a mission chapel behind them are shining exceptions to the rule. It is true that some secular institutions have taken their places. There is the Educational Alliance, and there are the university settlements, and on the edge of what may be called the infected district there is the Cooper Institute. But when we compare the total capacity of all these with the work that is waiting for such institutions to do we must be both amazed and ashamed at their incompetency.

This is work which, by the nature of their organization, the churches are better fitted than any other agencies to do. It is to the churches that those who are willing to give their substance for "moral insurance" against the dangers of an unreformed east side will naturally look in the first instance. There are, we are sure, very many devoted young clergymen who would rejoice to give themselves to this work. And among them there must be many who recognize that it is necessary to humanize a man, and to some degree to civilize him, before you can attempt to Christianize him with any chance of success. A missionary enterprise, on the part of every denomination, upon the east side, would command far more abundant support than a missionary enterprise in China, and it could not produce less encouraging results. There is here a field for the churches which it is not to their credit that they have left untilled so largely and so long.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Active work has now begun on both of the little ships, or big boats, upon the relative merits of which depends the settlement of the momentous question whether the America's Cup is to remain for the present comfortably where it is, or whether it is soon to add a chapter to its very short record as an ocean traveler. A feature common to the already numerous articles and items about the coming defender and coming challenger is the prominence given in each case to the elaborate precautions taken by the respective designers to conceal the details of the plans on which they are working, and to prevent the publication of any authentic news about the boats. This secrecy is distinctly unpleasant to those of us who like to think of yachting as a sport the participants in which scorn to profit from any advantage even faintly questionable, and deem inglorious the victory won in conditions that whisper of superiorities other than those of skill and courage. In considering these disquieting efforts at concealment, however, it must be remembered that, though yacht racing is a sport for men whose only thought is pure glory, the designing and building of yachts is a business, the direct object of which is to make money. The preservation of trade secrets is justified in that business as in any other. If the men who sailed yachts also built them it would be more than difficult for them to defend the fierce and effective guarding of facts and figures that is now the custom, and they could retain their amateur standing only by the prompt and frank promulgation of all knowledge likely to help other designers to build better boats. As it is, such frankness cannot be expected. The designers have no amateur standing to maintain, their rivalry is intensely practical, and though success does bring them glory as well as money, the glory is strictly incidental to the advancement of business interests.

—Inability to realize the fact that a rumor, if printed as a rumor, is just as much news as are verified happenings or circumstances, printed as such, leads The Philadelphia Medical Journal into making some very stupid criticism of what it calls, in derisive quotation marks, "newspaper pathology." "The present illness of the Czar," it says, "furnishes many opportunities for the newspaper scribes to air their ignorance of the very elements of the science of pathology." As proof of this nothing is presented except the appearance, in addition to the bulletins of the Czar's physicians, of reports from St. Petersburg that the Czar had pulmonary tuberculosis and traumatic meningitis, as well as typhoid fever. Does the Philadelphia critic of "newspaper pathology" know that no such stories circulated in the Russian capital? In reality, those stories were afloat there, and it was perfectly legitimate journalism to say so. That the Czar's doctors told the exact truth may now be demonstrated, but their right to implicit confidence was by no means obvious to the student of Russian history.

—Of all the many contributions that have been made in this vicinity of late to the literature of municipal reform, quite the most remarkable, in our opinion—we would not go so far as to say the most valuable—is the letter from Mr. H. W. PALMER, a resident of Brooklyn, which we published yesterday. Mr. PALMER, who is evidently a person even more thoughtful than the average Brooklynite, and who therefore might fairly claim to be a philosopher profound indeed, looks further than the police, further than Tammany Hall, further than the natural wickedness of unregenerate human nature, to find the explanation of the lamentable phenomena now under such earnest consideration, and he declares that all our civic troubles arise from the inclination and determination of good women to keep their husbands at home in the evening! According to this truly astounding theory, urban conditions are what they are simply because citizens of the better and the best classes cannot devote to public affairs any appreciable part of the only time they have free from the demands of business—cannot, that is, without exciting in the minds of their wives an emotion which, whether it takes the form of grief or anger, is equally destructive of domestic happiness, and therefore must be calmed at any price, even at that of staying home o' nights and leaving the city and its moral and economic interests at the mercy of men bold and bad enough to ignore both the tears and the frowns of their consorts. We don't know just what to think about this presentation of the case. To deny its substantial accuracy is at once necessary and impossible, and the only apparent escape from the fearful dilemma is an attack on Mr. PALMER'S motives, which we know would be unsafe and which we do not know would be just. He is utterly wrong unless every long and universally accepted test of excellence in husbands is a delusion, and yet—and yet—well, there is a horrifying credibility about the theory which cannot be denied, instant as is the realization of the base uses to which husbands, with no thought at all for civic reform, are sure to put it.

—It was to have been expected that IBSEN would take the side of the Boers as against the British, but despite that fact—possibly because of it—he has just stated in an interview for publication that he is neither grieved nor indignant over what is now going on in South Africa. The Boers, he said, had themselves taken unrighteous possession of their territory after driving out the original inhabitants. A semi-civilized people, and with no intention of spreading civilization, they had for a long time done much to hinder the efforts of others. If, then, the British, who had a higher culture, came and wished to push their way into the country, that was no worse than what the Boers themselves had done; indeed, it was not so bad. In conclusion Mr. IBSEN said: "The British are only taking from the Boers what the Boers themselves had stolen. The Boers must put up with that. They have defended themselves bravely, but they also had good positions to defend." There is nothing original in these ideas, but coming from the man they do, from a man who has laid such emphasis on the inevitable punishment of all wrongdoing, they do not lack an oblique interest. A thoroughgoing imperialist would deny the implied premise that savages have an impugnable right to the lands they occupy, and the whole argument falls to pieces when one remembers that the tribes robbed by the Boers were themselves invaders, who had ruthlessly massacred their predecessors on the South African plateau. If only autochthonic possession is to be observed at this age of the world, certainly no nation and probably no people now in existence has the slightest right to the land it occupies, and the strong Governments can properly take what they want wherever they find it. For practical moralists, of course, a statute of limitations precludes action against nations as against individuals. The cause of the British would be poor indeed if it had no better support than that which this philosophical playwright sees for it, and yet one of the London papers says of his grotesque logic that in it "there is a lot of hard truth, if not much romance." That is getting things turned around with a vengeance.

—According to a late dispatch from the Philippines, an American force of thirty men the other day fought 300 insurgents for two hours, and finally defeated them, inflicting heavy losses and suffering none. There would have been nothing remarkable about this episode if it were not that the American force, so called, consisted of native scouts under a single officer from the United States. That fact is full of significance and encouragement—except for Don EMILIO AGUINALDO and his friends, brown and white. If service under an American officer makes one Filipino the superior in fighting efficiency to ten under native leadership, and if recruits for such service are to be secured with no particular difficulty—as seems to be the case—then the subjugation of the islands is a task far from hopeless, but ought, on the contrary, to be accomplished with reasonable promptness and at no great expense. The creation of a considerable body of native troops under the new flag will serve a double purpose—it will turn to legitimate use a part of the now very troublesome reluctance of the militant rebels to return to the dull pursuits of peace, and it will be most effectual in extinguishing that reluctance in the minds of the other militant rebels. Thus all of them will be kept out of mischief, and peace will descend upon the islands for the first time in their recorded history.

—Distasteful as is, on general principles, the retirement of Brig. Gen. EAGAN, effected in the way and for the reasons it is, still one's resentment is materially weakened by the humor that hides in the concluding sentence of Gen. MILES'S order. After announcing Gen. EAGAN'S retirement "upon his own application," and directing him to proceed to his home, Gen. MILES adds: "The travel enjoined is necessary for the public service." It is, indeed! Of course, the words are entirely regular and formal, but in this particular case they acquire a new and distinctly amusing significance. There is no doubt about their absolute truth, however dubious may be the accuracy of certain other expressions in the official correspondence.

POSTAL OFFICIAL ACCUSED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES has frequently espoused the cause of the overworked, underpaid postal clerks of this city. In obtruding upon your valuable space, I hope it will be clear to the Postmaster that some measure ought to be taken to relieve their present hard lot.

Last Spring the Merchants' Association of this city condemned the postal service as inadequate, especially the grossly insufficient clerical force, that seriously retarded and interfered with the vast business interests of the metropolis. Despite this, practically nothing has been done, unless we consider extending the work of a single branch—Station H—which was reinforced by clerks taken from the General Post Office in answer to the appeal of the merchants of New York.

After inspecting the paper department in the cellar of the General Post Office last Spring, Mr. Van Cott expressed surprise that men could do the exacting work of the department in such an underground dungeon. In praising the faithfulness of the clerks, the Postmaster remarked: "They are faithful unto death." With commendable consideration he ordered the division Superintendents to suspend overtime. This praise and action were certainly deserved, as things generally were in a very bad condition.

It was then decided to secure additional space in the Grand Central Palace. One hundred and fifty men from the New York, Pennsylvania, and East tables were transferred up town to handle the enormous quantity of mail sent there. It was then understood that this step was taken to relieve the congestion of mail down town and do away with overtime that, in a business like the postal service, where mind and body are in continual action, often prostrates the men after a busy spell.

Soon afterward the clerks observed they had been cleverly deceived. The brutal sweating system had become more intolerable than before. One and two hours' overtime were imposed, often without the slightest reason. Who is responsible for this? Unquestionably the Superintendent of this station—who recently informed reporters sent by their papers to secure information about a missing pouch containing thousands of dollars in cash, money orders, and registered matter, "That it was none of the public's business how much was lost"—is largely responsible for the sweating and overtime now practiced here.

Mr. Baldwin's conduct is arbitrary and high-handed in the extreme. The Postmaster, a shrewd practical district leader, does himself a grave injustice in permitting him to ride his pet hobby of sweating the clerks under him. The force of this office has lately been increased by more than forty men. But if forty more were added, Mr. Baldwin and his assistant would find or invent some excuse for detaining the men after their proper time. That is, unless Mr. Van Cott, for whom I have a high personal regard, takes a hand in this important matter. A STATION CLERK.

AN ARCH TO HONOR ALL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your suggestion in this morning's edition as to the so-called "Dewey Arch" should be acted upon. The arch was a triumph of city decoration, and commemorated a National victory. New York, with its many private architectural monuments, has all too few public memorials.

Admiral Dewey deserves the high place he at one time held in the hearts of his countrymen. He lost only the sentimental adulation that was at no time his due. If he was married, gave away a house, and made a bid for the Presidency, it was because he was a man and subject to error. He is still the hero of Manila. His fame is still undimmed.

But an arch like this is due to no one man; it is due to the American Navy; due to Paul Jones, Lawrence, Perry, Decatur, Farragut, Porter, Dewey, Schley, and Sampson. It is due to the gallant men and officers who fought and died under them, and for whom these names are but a symbol. For the number of ships and guns, the record of the American Navy is absolutely untouched and unapproachable. Not even England can muster, in her 300 years of maritime glory, such a percentage of dash, devotion, and disciplined valor.

The artistic necessities of the city require an inspiring monument, and the navy deserves to be commemorated in art. This, not only for the pleasure and pride of people of to-day, but as a lesson and an inspiration to future generations; and, further, as a debt of honor to the men who have devoted a lifetime to an arduous duty.

And the means? A few hundred thousand dollars! Where are your patriotic New Yorkers? Messrs. Astor, Vanderbilt, Rockefeller, Gould, and others. You, who can put your hands in your pockets and pull out a hundred thousand dollars as I would a quarter; where are you? Pass around the hat, Mr. John Jacob Astor. You get your money's worth every year out of this city; so do the other gentlemen. I have no doubt that you can place in the cornerstone of the monument a tablet with this inscription: "This monument is presented to the City of New York by grateful citizens, to the end that the city may be beautified and that the men who defend her may be honored for all time to come."

A Plea for a Naval Arch.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why is it that we continually hear of the "Dewey Arch," instead of (as one of the editorials in this morning's TIMES was headed) the Naval Arch? Was it not for all the gallant heroes of our navy? If we desire to have it perpetuated—and there are many who do—let us stop tecking the name of "Dewey" to it, and try to awaken a new interest in an arch to the honor of our whole brave naval force.

Metropolitan's Ways Condemned.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If there is any one way in which the Metropolitan Street Railway Company is more outrageous and insolent than another, it is the manner in which its cars obstruct the entrances to the Park against any one riding or driving.

Steam railroads have been obliged to expend hundreds of millions in grade crossings; the poor elevated railroad has been mulcted in tremendous damages for property which it has benefited, while every form of trust has been attacked—the worst of which is innocence personified in comparison with the Metropolitan Company. Yet the latter continues its juggernaut course, violating every law, oppressing every citizen, and rendering the city an almost impossible place of habitation. Is there no redress. WILLIAM G.

Interregnum and Interval.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of the most inexcusably bad forms of "newspaper English" that often confronts us is the use of "interregnum" as a synonym of "interval." Literally, the word in Latin, whence it is derived, signifies the time in which a throne is vacant between the death or abdication of one monarch and the accession of another.

Its use as an intermission in any order of succession, and breach of continuity, is palpably at variance with generic etymology.

I am not unmindful of the fact that this broadened meaning of the word is sustained by one of the latest lexicons of our language, but this illustrates the truth of the dictum propounded by an English lexicographer, Dr. Johnson, over a century ago, that "Dictionaries are like watches; the worst is better than none, and the best cannot be expected to go quite true."

Catholic Church Attendance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As to apathy in Catholic churches, it may be interesting to "I." to know that there are 111 Catholic churches in this city, and a very conservative average estimate of attendance at each church may be placed at 2,500. At some of the larger churches there are 10,000 people going through the doors every Sunday. If we take the figures of the above estimate, 275,000 people attend divine service in the Catholic churches each Sunday. There are not many signs of apathy in this fact.

I think "I." will find it hard to verify his statement that the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick gathered in St. Patrick's Church, Mott Street, last March or that such words as he quotes were uttered on the occasion. K. C. DONGAN.

In Behalf of the Teachers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You publish in to-day's issue a letter signed "An Interested Citizen," and composed of kindness and good sense in equal parts. Is your correspondent aware of the fact that the Charter Commission, from which he appears to expect recognition of the needs of the schools and their teachers, has recommended that the Legislature rescind the law compelling since last May the payment of fair salaries to the teaching staff in our city schools? And does he know that this commission has made another recommendation even more cruel than this, that the Legislature rescind the law giving to the Teachers' Pension Fund 5 per cent. of the excise moneys? This is the fund that provides for teachers physically incapacitated after thirty-five years of service in the New York schools, and without it the aged and helpless of our class have nothing fixed and certain to depend upon.

This heartless suggestion is a disgrace to the men who indorsed it, and the Empire City should be bankrupt before beginning to save a little money at the expense of such pensioners. PRINCIPAL.

THE LAND OF MAKE BELIEVE.

Mary Norton Bradford in Boston Globe.

To the gates of Dawn, how gladly
Would the grayheads all go back,
And, among the little children,
For a while forget the rack!
How their purblind eyes would brighten,
How their hearts with joy would heave,
Could they once again be dwellers
In the Land of Make Believe!

O, what treasures that a Croesus
Has amassed can equal those
That before the gaze of childhood,
As by magic, once arose?
All are rich if but they will be,
All possess what they perceive—
To life's largess there's no limit
In the Land of Make Believe!

What a land it is to live in,
Where a palace is as cheap
As a hovel—where the littlest
May with giant strides o'erleap
Highest heights! Tho' bringing knowledge,
How the flying years bereave
Us of all our happy dwellings
In the Land of Make Believe!

Still so curious is the human,
E'en in childhood—oft he goes
Far outside Joy's sphere, a-weeping
O'er imaginary woes;
For the one that's born a poet,
Tho' he knows not why, must grieve
O'er the tears that fall outside of
The bright Land of Make Believe!

A Fulton Market man gives this simple rule for fish buyers to follow if they would secure fish that is eatable and certainly free of the ptomaines of which so many fish lovers stand in dread: See that the flesh is so firm that it will not be dented on pressure by the fingers, that the eyes are full, the scales bright, the fins stiff, and the gills are of the brightest, neither pale nor a dark liver, color. Then, if there is no odor to the fish, it may be eaten not only with safety, but with relish—if your cook knows how to properly prepare and serve it.

"Discretionary pools" of the Wall Street district are no longer in it as rapid money makers, if the breeders of the rabbits known as Belgian hares are to be believed. According to the circulars sent out by some dealers in this new fad, the shortest and quickest way to a fortune is in raising these rabbits. The proprietor of one of the rabbitries, who seems more than philanthropically anxious to let other people in on the ground floor, instead of keeping the good thing to himself, says: "A doe has an average of 6 litters, or 50 young ones, a year; consequently, 100 does would produce 5,000 young a year. At the age of six months the weight is usually eight pounds. Hare meat sells in Chicago at 20 cents a pound, and the pelts bring 80 cents apiece, for use in making imitation sealskin. So the revenue from a year's product of a hutch of 100 does would be $12,000, the flesh bringing $1.60 and the pelt 80 cents, a total of $2.40 for every animal bred, and 5,000 times $2.40 is $12,000." Sounds well when you say it fast, and looks tempting on paper, like the promises of the discretionary-pool fellows in their circulars. But don't be led into buying a litter of the so-called hares until you have investigated the other side. As a matter of fact, there is no demand for Belgian hares as food in the markets. Wild rabbits, which are rather more to the taste of people, who can eat that sort of food, sell for 25 cents each at retail, and the supply is far in excess of the demand. A hunter gets about 10 cents apiece for them, and their use for food is confined to a few Germans. Pelts of Belgian hares, when American cured, are not in demand among furriers. One of the largest furriers says the best pelt he ever saw was worth not more than 25 cents. Belgian hares are not served at the city restaurants, though several of the best hotels have vainly tried to get their customers to eat them. Marketmen say that 20 cents a pound may have been paid for one or two hares in Chicago, but that here it would be hard to dispose of them at 20 cents a carcass. Visions of Belgian hares as a rapid road to a fortune may therefore be dispelled, in spite of the assertions in the get-rich-quick circulars of men who have them for sale. Until there is a market created for the meat and people learn how to cure and dress the pelts, men, and particularly women, who have a little bit of land on which to raise these beasts had better stick to chickens and eggs as the shorter route to independence.

Married members of the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn are priding themselves on their skill and general superiority over the bachelor cubs of their organization. They had been accused of being "back numbers" by the youngsters. A challenge for competition in a series of sports in which the club members excel resulted. In everything but billiards and handball the married men were successful. As the bachelors had to pay for the dinners, they have since been much less aggressive and assertive. The scores in the several contests were as follows: Whist, married men, 2,608; bachelors, 2,408; candle pins, married, 1,744; singles, 1,724; tenpins, married, 6,423; single, 5,907; shooting, married, 105; single, 84; billiards, married, 979; single, 1,152; pool, married, 970; single, 924; handball, married, 226; single, 260; golf, married, 39; single, 28.

They were chatting about some of the perils of hunting in these days of stricter game law enforcement at one of the Broadway ammunition houses yesterday, while waiting for shells that were being filled. One of them was just back from a rabbit shooting excursion down in Southern Pennsylvania, and while there heard rehearsed the experiences of some brother hunters. One was a young man from New Castle, who went for rabbits with a ferret, which, as all hunters know, is contrary to the law "in such cases made and provided." He got four rabbits. He also got arrested. Cost of the expedition, $125 fine for hunting with a ferret, $100 fine for the four rabbits killed by the ferret, and $25 fine for having a ferret in his possession. His gun was confiscated and his ferret killed by the authorities. The young hunter thinks he was lucky to escape with his life. Another experience was that of three Pennsylvanians who ventured into Delaware after rabbits. They had neglected to obtain the license required by the State law. Before their hunt was finished all were arrested with two rabbits, the net result of their hunt, in their possession. Each was fined $25, and as one of them was shy that amount he had to remain in the lock-up over night, while his friends went home and raised the sum necessary to pay his fine and secure his release.

With one thorough-going American as manager, another as skipper, and with a crew of Maine sailors, the chances are that the American language will be spoken on the cup defender that is to sail for the America's Cup this Fall. It was but a short time ago that it was thought necessary for the crew of an American yacht to be made up of "square-heads," as the sailormen call all Scandinavians. In the days of the Puritan, yachtsmen will remember the saying that "Capten Aw-berry Crocker and a crew of Naw-widgins can beat all creation," that was in the mouths of all interested in the sport. It was funny in those days to hear the order as the yacht came to anchor, "Let the jib run down," shouted back by a Norwegian mate, "Ay, ay, Sir, let de yib yun down." There may be a good honest nasal drawl when the orders are shouted back this Summer, but there will be no foreign tongues to stumble over the "th's" and "j's" in response to Skipper Rhodes's orders.

Central Park begins to show marked signs of the expectation of wintry weather. Following the housing of the animals in the menagerie some weeks ago there has now come the assembling of the swans, ducks, and geese in Winter quarters in the little pond at the foot of Seventy-seventh Street. The lazy ones among the squirrels have been very busy this week putting the finishing touches to their nests in the crotches of the big trees. With mouths filled with twigs, scraps of paper or bits of cloth that they find scattered on the lawns the squirrels go scampering to their Winter quarters to make them warm and cozy as possible. Workmen have begun the erection of the skating house at the pond near the Seventy-second Street entrance, a proceeding of more than ordinary interest to the small boy, who stands about watching everything critically and anticipating the delights of the days when the red ball is up. Strollers in the park are few, but the bridle paths are crowded more than ever, though the drives tell the story of discomfort in riding unless one is thoroughly wrapped up.

There is at least one resident on Riverside Drive who is not a member of the Thirteen Club. He evidently has that horror of the number thirteen that some people still affect even in these days of no superstition. There is no number 313 on the street. There is a 311, a 312, and a 314, but between the two latter there is a 312½, which tells a little story of a superstitious resident in that fashionable quarter of the town.

It was one of "the cloth" who says it: "When the Legislature at Albany assembles one of the very first things it should do is to enact a law making it no less than a felony for a minister to marry any couple who are under the legal age without a writing signed by the parents or guardians of both parties consenting to the marriage. State prison is the place for a clergyman who unites in marriage a girl of fourteen to a boy of nineteen, as was done the other day. I am ashamed to say, by a member of my profession. It is such reckless marrying that has more than any other one cause, in my opinion, to do with the enormous number of divorce cases that are lumbering up the court records. It is altogether too easy to be married in this State, and in most States, for that matter. Vigorous measures should be taken to put a stop to this ease of making a contract that causes trouble for all the parties concerned. Personally, I am in favor of a law that will compel the taking out of marriage licenses, and the publication of these licenses for at least two weeks before the marriage ceremony may be performed. Then a clergyman should be compelled to file a certificate of the marriage within twenty-four hours, accompanied by the written consents of the parents or guardians where the contracting parties are one or both under the legal age, with a penalty of say $100 for neglecting to do so. Such a law would put a stop to a lot of such unhappy marriages as are constantly being aired in court."

KRUEGER AT THE HAGUE

Enthusiastic Receptions Accorded Him Throughout Holland.

TO MAKE HIS RESIDENCE THERE

Chanting of Psalms and Hymns a Feature of the Ceremonies—Likens the Transvaal to a Little Child.

THE HAGUE, Dec. 6.—Mr. Krüger arrived here to-day and was greeted at the station by the Burgomaster and Councilors. A choir of 600 men and girls chanted Psalm 72, Verses 6, 7, and 11. Mr. Krüger and his suite then repaired to the royal waiting room, where the Burgomaster warmly welcomed them in a brief speech.

Dr. Spink, the President of the local South African Association, followed in a long welcoming address, assuring Mr. Krüger of the deep sympathy of the entire Dutch Nation, "who had," he said, "so greatly, though vainly, hoped that the great powers who had recently assembled at the Peace Conference would not have permitted that in South Africa the right of nations, the right of war, and civil law should be trampled under foot, or a little nation be sacrificed in an unequal combat in defense of its existence."

The address, after a long eulogy of the heroism of the Boers, proceeded to liken Mr. Krüger to William the Silent, who sacrificed everything for the welfare of his people, and concluded:

"May your reliance on the Almighty, similar to that of the Prince of Orange, support you, Mr. President, in the arduous fight for right and liberty and may the liberty of your nation crown your courage. Then will Great Britain have learned the lesson of how dangerous it is to attempt to throttle the independence of a free nation."

Mr. Krüger, his suite, and the Reception Committee proceeded in open carriages to the Hotel des Indes, which was resplendent with flags and bunting. There a bevy of ladies, headed by the Baroness van Harinxma, greeted the Boer statesman and a choir sang a hymn. Mr. Krüger then mounted the staircase, preceded by three girls strewing blossoms. On his arrival in the Reception Room the Baroness presented Mr. Krüger with a bouquet.

The crowds remained long in front of the hotel cheering and singing. Finally Mr. Krüger appeared on the balcony, where he remained for a few minutes. He then retired, and was not seen again. After dining privately with his grandson, Mr. Eloff, he went early to bed, being greatly fatigued.

Mr. Krüger met with wonderful receptions everywhere after reaching the frontier at Zevenaar. Immense crowds gathered at all the stations, which were decorated with flags, the Burgomasters made speeches, and the scholars sang. Mr. Krüger made many replies, in most of which he represented the Transvaal as a little child whom a bad man wished to kill. In one case he illustrated his point by drawing attention to a fair-haired girl in the audience.

"If that child was assaulted," said he, "everybody would run to her rescue, but in my country children and women are being daily outraged by an enemy ten times stronger than the Transvaal."

At the opening of the Second Chamber today the President, J. G. Gleichman, said:

"President Krüger arrives here to-day. He will take up his residence here. I take the occasion to propose that the chamber authorize me to welcome in its name the President to our country and offer him an expression of our cordial sympathy."

The proposal was adopted amid cheers and bravos.

The First Chamber also authorized its President to welcome Mr. Krüger, in behalf of the House, as proof of its sympathy.

TO ASK THE KAISER AGAIN.

Mr. Kruger Will Request Him to Offer Arbitration.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—The Daily Mail publishes the following from its correspondent at The Hague:

"'When I asked Mr. Krüger whether he would renew his request to Emperor William to offer arbitration, he replied: 'Yes, but my faith remains in the King of Kings. South Africa will yet save itself.'"

PRO-BOER FEELING IN BERLIN.

Criticism of the Kaiser for His Attitude Toward Mr. Krueger.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—The German press continues to disapprove strongly Emperor William's refusal to receive Mr. Krüger. Even the pro-British Berliner Tageblatt regrets the "loss to Germany's prestige," and calls the Kaiser's refusal a "grave political mistake." The Deutsche Tages Zeitung says:

"There is no other explanation for Germany doing England this favor than political prepayments made by England."

There have been pro-Boer demonstrations in Berlin since Monday, especially at several variety theatres. At the Apollo Theatre, when an actor representing Mr. Krüger appeared, the entire audience rose and shouted: "Hoch braven Boers" and "Down with the English." There was a similar demonstration at the Reichshallen.

Count von Bülow, it is said in authoritative quarters, will soon tell the Reichstag why Mr. Krüger has not been received.

AFRIKANDER CONGRESS MEETS.

About 6,000 Dutchmen Assemble—Troops with Cannon Watch Them.

WORCESTER, Cape Colony, Dec. 6.—About 6,000 Dutchmen assembled in the open air at the Gum Tree Plantation, on the edge of the town, to take part in the Afrikander Congress. Horsemen from a radius of sixty miles had been riding in all night.

More troops have arrived here. Some 1,500 Canadians and Australians are camped around the town, and ten guns are in position.

The Afrikanders ridicule the idea of trouble. They say they can surely air their grievances without resorting to violence. They are greatly incensed at the posting of guns in positions commanding the meeting place. The slopes surrounding the town are crowned with artillery and troops with cannon have been posted on Gallows Hill and Prospect Hill.

After a number of violent speeches—the speakers, however, repudiating all idea of rebellion and keeping within stricter limits than had been anticipated—three resolutions were carried by acclamation, and a delegation was appointed to submit them to Sir Alfred Milner.

The first resolution demands the termination of the war, with its untold misery, protests against the devastation of the country and the burning of farms, which "will leave a lasting heritage of bitterness," and declares that the independence of the republics will alone insure peace in South Africa.

The second urges the right of the colony to manage its own affairs and censures the policy of Sir Alfred Milner.

The third pledges the congress to "labor in a constitutional way" to attain the ends defined in the two preceding resolutions and directs that they be sent to Sir Alfred Milner for submission to the imperial Government.

The Government is distributing broadcast a leaflet showing up the falsity of many of the anti-British stories and pointing out the hopelessness of the Boer resistance, as the British hold 14,000 prisoners and all the principal towns in the two republics.

ROBERTS'S PLEA FOR BOERS.

Urges that the Hand of Fellowship Be Extended to Them—Honors Them for Fighting.

DURBAN, Dec. 5.—Lord Roberts, on board the Canada, has started for Cape Town. He was given an enthusiastic send-off. All of the ships in the harbor were decorated with flags. Miss Roberts, who accompanied her father, has returned to Johannesburg, where she will join her mother and sister, going from that place to Cape Town.

Prior to his departure Lord Roberts made a speech, during the course of which he enjoined his hearers to hold out the hand of fellowship to those who had been their enemies.

"When blessed peace is restored," said the Field Marshal, "you will tell them that we are all one in one country, that we have one interest, and that we honor them. They have been fighting for a wrong cause, having been induced to do so by their misguided rulers.

"Nevertheless, we honor them for fighting for the liberty we ourselves so thoroughly believe in. And now, in the spirit of liberty, truth, justice, and freedom, we are prepared to extend these privileges, which every Englishman values, to those who have been fighting against us."

BOERS ATTACK A CONVOY.

Destroy Half of It and Kill Fifteen Men—Their Loss Heavy.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—The War Office has received a dispatch from Lord Kitchener, dated Bloemfontein, Dec. 6, announcing that Gen. Delarey, with 500 Boers, attacked a convoy proceeding from Pretoria to Rustenburg, at Buffelspoert, Dec. 3, burned half the convoy and killed fifteen men and wounded twenty-three, including Lieut. Baker.

The Boers, the dispatch adds, suffered considerable loss, some of them being killed with case shot at fifty yards. Guns and assistance were sent from Rustenburg and Commando Nek, and the Boers were driven off.

The advices also say Gen. De Wet crossed the Caledon, Dec. 5, at Kareepont Drift, making for Odendal. Gen. Knox was following him. The Drift was held by a detachment of the guards and the river was flooded.

PRETORIA, Dec. 5.—Lord Kitchener has stopped payments to burghers for the use of their wagons until Boer resistance ceases. Civilian passenger traffic with Cape Colony is almost suspended and native traffic absolutely so.

Germans Furnish British Guns.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—The Ehrhardt factories in Elsenach and Dusseldorf are furnishing Great Britain, through the British South Africa Chartered Company, with eighteen batteries of quick-firers. Some of the papers this evening call upon the Government to stop this, as a contravention of Germany's neutrality.

POPE AGAIN OPERATED UPON.

Report that a Tumor Was Removed from Underneath the Pontiff's Arm.

ROME, Dec. 6.—The Mesagero to-day says Dr. Mazzoni, the Pope's physician, performed a slight operation yesterday on a tumor underneath the Pontiff's arm.

The Mesagero asserts that the health of the Pope has not been altogether satisfactory for some time past, and that he has occasionally suffered in the part where he was operated upon in 1898, which caused his physicians to perform a slight operation yesterday, which removed the pain.

The Pope has merely been recommended to rest for a few days, according to the paper mentioned.

On the other hand, a semi-official statement says the Pope's health is perfect and that he continues his numerous receptions without fatigue.

The only incident, according to the semi-official statement, was that the Pope, a month ago, while examining a heavy object, dropped it on his left toe. He said nothing until this week, when he told his physicians that he felt pain in walking, and Drs. Lapponi and Mazzoni dressed the bruise. The Pope to-day is quite well, and it is incorrect to say that the operation of 1898 is giving him trouble, as only a healthy scar remains.

LONDON, Dec. 6.—As a result of the summons obtained by the Anti-Gambling League against C. Arthur Pearson, for publishing skill competitions in his weekly paper, Mr. Pearson was fined £300 and costs to-day at Bow Street Police Court.

WANTS AMERICAN PICTURES.

French Government Wishes to Buy Some for the Luxembourg.

PARIS, Dec. 6.—It has been learned that the French Government has given John B. Cauldwell, Director of Arts at the Paris Exposition, who sailed on the Deutschland last Friday, a commission to sound certain American artists resident in the United States upon the subject of the sale of some of their works.

The French Minister of Fine Arts has expressed the desire of the Government to secure examples of the art of American painters living in the United States for the National Gallery in the Palace of the Luxembourg. This is one of the results of the excellent showing made by American artists at the Paris Exhibition.

SITUATION IN SANTO DOMINGO.

President Jimenes Recommends Reciprocity with United States.

SANTO DOMINGO, Island of Santo Domingo, Dec. 6.—An extra session of Congress was opened yesterday. President Jimenes's message recommends a reciprocity treaty with the United States and concessions for railroads in Barahona and Monte-Christi.

The Director of the National Bank, recently declared bankrupt by the Tribunal, has deposited the keys of the safe with the United States Consul. He claims that the contracts oblige the Government to redeem the bank notes. The bankruptcy proceedings are continuing. The British residents are depositing their notes with their Consul.

The bank officials have employed counsel to oppose the Tribunal's action.

The authorities are awaiting the accounts of the Santo Domingo Improvement Company.

The country is quiet and business is improving.

FRENCH AMNESTY BILL.

Discussion on the Government's Measure in the Chamber of Deputies.

PARIS, Dec. 6.—In the Chamber of Deputies the debate on the Government's Amnesty bill, as amended by the Senate, crowded the House this afternoon.

M. Drumont, the anti-Semite agitator, demanded that the measure be applied generally and notably to MM. Déroulède, Guérin, and Marcel-Habert.

M. Lasies, anti-Semite, said the Government's sole aim was to stop certain inconvenient trials. He reproached it for excluding political prisoners from the amnesty.

M. Guieysse, Radical Republican, said the affair which dominated all the others was the Dreyfus case. Amnesty would deprive Dreyfus of the means of proving his innocence, and, if guilty, he ought not to be pardoned. Continuing, M. Guieysse declared, amid noisy interruptions, that amnesty would shelter a rascal like Esterhazy and leave under suspicion estimable officers such as Picquart.

The Minister of War, Gen. André, in declining the Nationalist invitation to make a statement, simply said it was his strict duty to refuse to enter into a discussion of judgments already pronounced. This statement called forth cheers from the Left and loud protests from the Right.

M. Deribère proposed that, in view of the appeasement, amnesty be made general, except in cases of treason.

The Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, replied. He said the Government did not propose amnesty because it did not wish to expose the country to fresh agitation. Those for whom amnesty was demanded always had threats on their lips.

Loud applause followed this statement. M. Deribère's motion was rejected by 311 to 272 votes.

The Kaiser's Ponderous Joke.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—Emperor William has just sent to Count Von Bülow a package containing a hundred pounds of soap with which to clean the Chancellor's palace, the Count having complained that the Countess was afraid of a grand cleaning.

Ex-Dancer's Gift to Charity.

FEAR WAR IN CHINA WILL BE RENEWED

Foreigners in Peking Think Settlement Is Impossible.

Believe Partition Will Be the Only Solution—The Envoys' Amended Demands.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—"Negotiations for the peace settlement have not yet been opened," says the Peking correspondent of The Morning Post, wiring yesterday. "The French, German, and Japanese Ministers are awaiting instructions, and Prince Ching and Li-Hung-Chang are awaiting a more satisfactory edict.

"The impression is growing among men of all nationalities that peace is impossible; that a resumption of the campaign in the Spring is inevitable, and that partition will be the only solution.

"Two American missionaries complain that the Germans at Cho-Chow loot converts equally with other Chinese."

The Daily News publishes the following from Nagasaki, dated Dec. 4:

"The order to send 5,000 Russian troops back to Odessa has been countermanded. They will remain in the Far East until further orders."

"Influential Chinese state," says the Shanghai correspondent of The Times, "that the Court is preparing to leave Sian-Foo immediately, although its destination is not known here."

Dr. Morrison, wiring to The Times from Peking on Dec. 5, confirms the reported acceptance of Mr. Conger's amendments to the joint note, and says:

"The names of the guilty are not specified, the stipulation only providing that those Princes and officials must be punished who are recognized as guilty by the Chinese Government, with the addition of others to be hereafter designated by the Ministers.

"The practical result of this compromise is that the form of punishment is left for the determination of the Empress Dowager, who is the arch culprit. The history of the compromise is instructive. The proposal came originally from Japan. It was communicated to Germany, and then to Washington. Although the amendments were presented by Mr. Conger, all the credit for securing softened terms is given by the Chinese, not to Japan or America, but to the Russians, who continue to handle the Chinese with consummate dexterity."

PEKING, Dec. 5.—At the meeting of the foreign envoys at which it was agreed to modify in a measure the demands as to the punishment of the Chinese responsible for the outrages against foreigners a demand was made that those primarily responsible should be punished.

This was acceptable to the representatives of the powers, and it was also agreed that officials within whose districts trouble occurred cannot hold office again if it is proved that they did not take the necessary steps to prevent the attacks upon foreigners.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—There has been no word from Minister Conger since the dispatch to him of his instructions to sign the envoys' agreement. It is assumed here that several days must elapse before the formal signatures of all the powers interested can be obtained to the agreement. Then it will be laid before Prince Ching and Li-Hung-Chang, who will probably be supplemented by the Viceroys of Nanking and Hankow, the latter acting by telegraph, constituting the Board of Commissioners to represent the Chinese Government.

The envoys' agreement is not a peace treaty in any sense of the term. It is nothing but a statement of the terms upon which the powers will negotiate with China for a final settlement.

FUNERAL OF COL. VON YORCK.

PEKING, Dec. 5.—The funeral of Col. Count von Yorck, who commanded a German column of 1,000 men operating in the vicinity of Kalgan, and who was asphyxiated while sleeping near a charcoal burning Chinese stove, was an impressive international affair. The foreign Ministers, all the Secretaries of legations, and all the foreign Generals, with their staffs, were in attendance.

The body of Col. von Yorck will remain under guard until Spring, when it will be sent to Germany.

PUNITIVE MEASURES DENOUNCED.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—A dispatch to The Pall Mall Gazette from Peking, dated Dec. 5, says:

"The filibustering character of the Kalgan and similar expeditions projected has made a very bad impression. There is danger of the Chinese regarding the allies as nothing more nor less than Western brigands. Explanatory proclamations should be issued in regard to the expeditions in order, as far as possible, to diminish their harmful effects."

The Pall Mall Gazette comments editorially on this phase of the situation as follows:

"Unless the allies are sure the burned villages deliberately harbor Boxers, and the poor, ruined villagers know why the flames are sent to heaven, Western civilization is behaving uncommonly like Eastern barbarism."

WEDDINGS OF A DAY.

Clarkson—Smith.

The wedding of Banyer Clarkson and Miss Helen Smith, daughter of Mrs. N. Denton Smith, was celebrated at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst of that church, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Greer of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church, officiated. The bride entered the church upon the arm of her uncle, the Rev. Dr. Tuttle Smith, who gave her away. The bridal gown was of white satin, and the bride wore a veil of old point lace. The maid of honor was Miss Ethel Smith, a younger sister of the bride. She was gowned in white liberty silk and wore a Gainsborough hat of white, trimmed with ostrich plumes. Mr. Clarkson's best man was J. Pierrepont Edwards, and his ushers were John Clarkson, John Jay, Irving Paris, William Foulke, Edward de Peyster Livingston, Edward N. Crosby, and Louis G. Smith, a cousin of the bride. The wedding was a quiet and small one, as the bride's family are in mourning for the late N. Denton Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Clarkson will spend the Winter traveling abroad, and will visit Egypt. Among the guests at the wedding were Mrs. N. Denton Smith, the Misses Smith, Mr. and Mrs. James Russell Parsons of Albany, Mrs. John Jay, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Clarkson, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Clarkson, Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Roberts—Steele.

Miss Carrie Steele and Dr. Dudley D. Roberts were married at the home of the bride's father, Sanford H. Steele, 36 Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn, last evening. The bridegroom was for six years associated with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Bellevue Hospital, but recently went to Brooklyn to reside and practice.

The large drawing room and parlors of the Steele home were decorated with American Beauty roses and white chrysanthemums, and in the halls there was a veritable maze of greens. At one end of the drawing room there was a bower of palms and ferns, before which the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. L. Mason Clarke of the First Presbyterian Church. Miss Ann J. Bliss was the maid of honor, and Prof. Leonard McWood of Columbia University was the best man.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Friday, generally an off day in society, even at the height of the season, brings this week a number of incidents and events. There will be several coming-out receptions. A dinner dance, to be given by Mrs. Charles R. Henderson at Delmonico's to introduce her daughter, Miss Nathalie Henderson, and the first performance by the Strollers. The younger element in society will therefore have a gay and lively day.

There will be a large and fashionable attendance at the first performance of the Strollers of "The Cruise of the Summer Girl" in the Astoria ballroom this evening. Those who saw what was really the dress rehearsal of the piece in Yonkers on Wednesday evening pronounce it a more than ordinarily interesting production. The principal parts are to be taken by Miss Elisabeth Donaldson, Miss Grace Hoyt, Miss Marion K. Sutton, Miss Grace Hornby, Miss Marion Waldron, William R. Delehanty, Edward Fales Coward, Louis Fitzgerald, Jr., Robert J. Webb, Gerald Benkard, Otho Cushing, and James R. Cooper, and there will be a chorus of thirty-two voices, sixteen girls and sixteen men.

With the exception of several coming-out receptions, yesterday was not a particular lively day in society. In the evening there were a number of dinners for young people, and Mr. and Mrs. Gallatin gave the first of a series of three dances for their débutante daughter, Miss May Gallatin. There was also a meeting of the Thursday Evening Club. The annual or anniversary dinner of the St. Nicholas Society, a story of which appears in another column, and which took place at Delmonico's last evening, was, as usual, largely attended. Late promenaders in the vicinity of Delmonico's were treated to the annual spectacle of numbers of elderly and portly men on their homeward way laden with round paper parcels containing pipes, mugs, and other souvenirs of a Dutch flavor, which are always features of the anniversary dinner of this organization.

The dance given last evening by Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Gallatin at their Fifth Avenue residence for their débutante daughter, Miss May Gallatin, whose coming-out reception was an event of last Saturday, was a brilliant affair. Mrs. Gallatin's two daughters, Mrs. Howland Pell and Mrs. George P. Cammann, assisted her in receiving the guests, most of whom came from the dinners given by Mrs. Hone, Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Pratt, Mrs. Schenck, Mrs. Morris, Mrs. Henderson, and others, the dinner-givers chaperoning their guests. The cotillion, which began shortly after 10, was led by Schuyler Schieffelin, dancing with Miss May Gallatin, and the favors consisted of handsome gold and silver pins, &c. Miss Sargent is a representative of old Washington society, her great great-grandfather having been President of the Senate at the establishing of the Government in the District of Columbia. Assisting Mrs. Sargent were Mrs. Alexander Mackey-Smith, Miss Jane Riggs, Miss Alice Ward, Miss McCauley, Miss Austin, and Miss Harriet Winslow.

Thomas F. Walsh, a Commissioner to the Paris Exposition, and Mrs. Walsh, to-day entertained Mr. Walsh's fellow Commissioners and some thirty other guests with an excursion to Mount Vernon. The steamer Macalister was chartered for the occasion, and beautifully decorated with palms, flags, and a wealth of American Beauty roses, which completely exhausted the supply in Washington and Baltimore of this particular flower. A luncheon was served, an orchestra placed behind a wall of palms playing throughout the repast. The tour of the grounds and mansion at Mount Vernon was enjoyed by a majority of the guests for the first time. To-morrow Mr. and Mrs. Walsh will give a large afternoon reception in honor of the Commissioners.

Odell, Jr., wife of the Governor-elect, by Mrs. Theodore Hall, a prominent society woman of Larchmont-on-the-Sound at her country residence in that place to-day. Mrs. Hall formerly resided at Newburg and was a schoolmate of Mrs. Odell.

More than 100 prominent women of Newburg, New York, and Larchmont attended the reception and congratulated the wife of the Governor-elect. Mrs. Hall was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Richard Cobden, wife of the rector of St. John's Episcopal Church; Miss Emily Morrison, and Mrs. Kelly, the wife of Lieut. William Kelly of the West Point Military Academy. Tea was poured by Mrs. W. C. Hunting and Mrs. Jack Gilmore of Larchmont.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

Western Presidents Confronted by Difficulties — Three Committees Report.

The conference of Western Railroad Presidents met again yesterday afternoon and, after a three hours' discussion, again adjourned without disposing of the business before it. The conference will meet again at 11 o'clock to-day. President Jeffery, the Permanent Chairman of the conference, said after the adjournment yesterday that the reports from some of the committees were disposed of during the afternoon session.

"The Denver, the St. Louis, and the Omaha Committees," said Mr. Jeffery, "have reported satisfactory progress in the maintenance of rates and the settlement of other questions which have come before them. The Kansas City and the St. Paul Committees did not report such favorable progress, and asked for more time. The Committee on the Interchange of Passes was instructed to confer with similar committees appointed by other traffic associations and to report back to this conference before Oct. 1 next. It was decided that it was too close to the end of the present year to make any changes in the issuing of passes."

President Jeffery added that the outlook promised well, and that he expected that all questions would be satisfactorily disposed of at the final meeting of the conference to-day. Information received from unofficial sources, however, confirms the opinion, which has prevailed among all those familiar with the situation, that the difficulties presenting themselves for solution are not of so light a nature as the presiding officer of the conference is attempting to make them appear. It was stated yesterday that some very pointed opinions had been expressed at the meeting, and that at one time the representatives of certain lines went so far as to threaten their withdrawal from the conference.

The difficulties encountered by the Kansas City and St. Paul Committees are of a serious nature, and unless some change of opinion was effected in certain quarters at a number of private dinners, which were held last night, it is not believed that the conference will be successful to-day in disposing of these disagreements.

The attendance yesterday was unusually large, among those who were present yesterday, but not the day before, being Charles M. Hays, the President of the Southern Pacific Company.

PENNSYLVANIA'S STOCK INCREASE.

Can Be Made, It Is Said, Without Recourse to the Legislature.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 6.—The Pennsylvania Railroad, whose officials gave notice to the stockholders at their last annual meeting that they would be asked to authorize an increase in the present authorized capital stock of the company at their annual meeting in March next, will not be required to obtain the sanction of the Legislature, as has been erroneously stated and as has heretofore been required when similar action was desired. The proposed increase, if sanctioned by the stockholders at their annual meeting, will be made under an act of the Legislature approved May 3, 1899, which was passed as a revenue measure and which imposes a bonus upon the capital stock of steam railroads incorporated subsequent to its passage, or upon the increased capitalization of those already incorporated.

Beyond saying that the proposed increase in capitalization would be made under this act, Pennsylvania officials decline to discuss at this time the amount of the increase which the stockholders will be asked to authorize. In view of the fact that the revenue portion of the act requires the payment of a bonus of one-third of 1 per cent. upon every dollar of such increase, it is hardly probable that the officials will ask for an amount in excess of the immediate requirements of the company.

Brief Railroad Items.

Rumors were current yesterday to the effect that the proposed Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad would be abandoned. W. W. S. Thorne of the Pennsylvania Coal Company and President of the proposed line, declined yesterday to confirm or deny the rumor, although heretofore he has always declared that the road would be built.

The Richmond Locomotive Works have just received an order from the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company for twenty-five 22-inch by 28-inch consolidation freight locomotives. These engines are exact duplicates of the twenty-five machines now under construction at the Richmond Works, and the aggregate value of these fifty locomotives is about $750,000. These engines are among the heaviest in use in this country, and will weigh, in working order, 287,000 pounds.

Buffalo-New York lines have agreed to abolish all clergy fares on Jan. 1, 1901, and after that date all clergymen, church workers, missionaries, &c., will have to pay full fares, instead of the half fare for which it has been their privilege to ride on these lines for many years.

Thomas F. Ryan yesterday declared that there was no truth in the reports that the Père Marquette system would go into the hands of one of the larger lines.

Student Called to the Pulpit.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Dec. 6.—The members of the First Baptist Church last evening chose Percy R. Ferris of Newark pastor of the church. Mr. Ferris is a student at the New York University, and has not yet been ordained. He will be ordained immediately and begin his charge, going to New York daily to complete his studies. The pastorate of the church has been vacant since Sept. 1, when the Rev. Dr. George J. Allen resigned.

To Nominate A. H. Clark for Senator.

At a caucus of the Democratic Assemblymen of Hudson County held at the Davis Association Clubhouse, Jersey City, last night, it was decided to nominate Alvah H. Clark of Somerset for United States Senator and George G. Tennant for Speaker. Maurice Marks was named as the party leader.

The following are some of the salient points of a letter addressed to us under date of November 26, 1900, by Mr. H. H. Vreeland, President of the Third Avenue Railroad Co. and of the Metropolitan Street Railway Co.:
THE THIRD AVENUE RAILROAD CO. OWNS OR CONTROLS, through the ownership of stock, a total system of street railroads AGGREGATING 269.09 MILES; its charter, obtained in 1853, is unlimited as to duration, and is one of the most valuable and comprehensive street railway franchises granted by the City of New York; it owns real estate of great value in various parts of the City of New York and elsewhere. The bonds of the present issue are secured by a mortgage upon the franchises, lines, equipment, and all other property of the Third Avenue Railroad Co., (including real estate,) subject only to the existing mortgage of $5,000,000, (to be eventually retired,) and also by the pledge and deposit with the Trustee of the Third Avenue Railroad Company's entire holdings of stock of the Forty-second St., Manhattanville and St. Nicholas Ave.; the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Battery; the Kingsbridge; the Union; the Southern Boulevard; the Tarrytown, White Plains and Mamaroneck; the Westchester Electric, and the Yonkers Railroad Companies, with provision for ultimately bringing all of the properties of the controlled Companies directly under the mortgage, subject only to the liens of the existing outstanding bonds, amounting to $8,443,000. Bonds of the par value of $13,443,000 have been reserved in the hands of the Trustee for the retirement or acquisition of all such outstanding Bonds, both of the Third Avenue Company and its controlled Companies, thus making provision for ULTIMATELY ASSURING TO THE FIRST CONSOLIDATED MORTGAGE AN ABSOLUTE FIRST LIEN ON ALL OF THE COMPANY'S PROPERTIES, INCLUDING THE CONTROLLED COMPANIES. Of the total authorized issue of $50,000,000, there have been issued and sold by the Company $35,000,000 for retiring the unfunded debt and for new equipment, improvements, construction, and additions; of the balance, $13,443,000 Bonds are set aside for retiring all outstanding Bonds of other issues, the remainder being reserved in accordance with the provisions of the mortgage.
THE FIXED CHARGES OF THE THIRD AVENUE COMPANY AND ITS CONTROLLED COMPANIES, INCLUSIVE OF THE ISSUE OF $35,000,000 OF THE ABOVE BONDS, AMOUNT TO $2,095,680; THIS WILL BE REDUCED BY $165,000 BY THE REPLACEMENT OF THE EXISTING FUNDED DEBT WITH THE NEW 4% BONDS RESERVED FOR THE PURPOSE. IT IS ESTIMATED THAT AFTER THE COMPLETION OF THE ELECTRIC EQUIPMENT NOW IN PROGRESS, AND WITH THE ADVANTAGES AND ECONOMIES RESULTING FROM THE CLOSE CONNECTION WITH THE METROPOLITAN STREET RAILWAY CO., THE ANNUAL NET EARNINGS OF THE THIRD AVENUE RAILROAD COMPANY WILL BE AT LEAST $3,000,000, WHICH, TOGETHER WITH THE SURPLUS EARNINGS OF THE METROPOLITAN STREET RAILWAY, (AFTER DEDUCTING ITS OWN FIXED CHARGES,) ON THE BASIS OF THE RESULTS OF THE LAST FISCAL YEAR, WOULD PROVIDE NET EARNINGS OF NEARLY $6,500,000 TO MEET FIXED CHARGES, AMOUNTING, AS ABOVE STATED, TO ABOUT $2,000,000 IN ALL, INCLUSIVE OF THE ENTIRE ISSUE OF THE NEW 4% BONDS.
THE METROPOLITAN STREET RAILWAY CO. GUARANTEES UNCONDITIONALLY BY INDORSEMENT THE PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST OF THE THIRD AVENUE R. R. 4% BONDS, AND HAS LEASED THE THIRD AVENUE RAILROAD, INCLUDING ITS CONTROLLED LINES, FOR 999 YEARS ON THE BASIS OF A DIVIDEND GUARANTEE ON THIRD AVENUE STOCK, WHICH, BEGINNING AFTER FOUR YEARS, WITH THE RATE OF 5% PER ANNUM, RISES AFTER TEN YEARS TO THE PERMANENT RATE OF 7% PER ANNUM.
THE CAPITAL STOCK OF THE THIRD AVENUE RAILROAD CO. IS $16,000,000. THE OUTSTANDING CAPITAL STOCK OF THE METROPOLITAN STREET RAILWAY CO. IS $45,000,000, ON WHICH IT IS PAYING DIVIDENDS AT THE RATE OF 7% PER ANNUM. AN ADDITIONAL $7,000,000, INCREASING THE CAPITAL STOCK TO $52,000,000, HAS BEEN AUTHORIZED. WITH THE THIRD AVENUE RAILROAD SYSTEM, IT CONTROLS THE ENTIRE SYSTEM OF SURFACE TRACTION LINES IN THE BOROUGHS OF MANHATTAN AND BRONX.

THE FOREIGN DISPOSITION.

Wall Street hears much of sales or plans to sell by European holders of American stocks. Such reports come chiefly, however, from speculative sources. Throughout the recent improvement in the American security market there has actually been small liquidation at any time apparent for the account of foreign holders. A canvass of the most important international banking houses here fails to disclose any disposition of the character which is so much emphasized in Wall Street's gossip. Upon the contrary, it is almost the universal sentiment among such authorities that recent election results here have added materially to the intrinsic value of American securities, and this view is set forth in correspondence from every European financial centre. The Berlin correspondent of one of the foremost Wall Street banking houses writes in this wise:
We do not understand the re-election of Mr. McKinley to mean so much as we understand the defeat of Mr. Bryan to be significant. Had your election result been different, we would have had difficulty on this side of the ocean in restraining investors from throwing overboard everything American. Now our popular opinion runs confidently to the belief that you are in for a determined era of prosperity, and that there will be no factitious interferences with your good times and your good faith.
While there was uncertainty as to what might be your Governmental policy, uncertainty as to how your electors might go, we saw much liquidation of American shares and bonds among our people; and the same was true, according to our advices, at Amsterdam and at a number of other important cities where Americans have been held in large volume during the past decade or more. But now that you have voted for business safety, for business progressiveness, and have voted to maintain the highest standard of financial integrity, you will hear from this side (though it may not be until after New Year's) in positive and substantial fashion of new confidence, which will mean new investments on a scale hitherto unprecedented. During the next twelve months we believe that German investors will take on twice as many American securities as ever hitherto have been held here. The entire "atmosphere" is changed—is cleared:

MARKET MOVEMENT.

The movement of prices on the stock market yesterday was very irregular. The opening was strong, under the influence of higher London prices and some fairly large buying orders. This strength was well maintained until about 1 o'clock, when a break in Tennessee Coal and a rather sharp decline in Sugar Trust stock tended to depress the entire list. Toward the close a firmer tone developed on the announcement of the increased dividend on Denver and Rio Grande preferred, and the continued evidence of Morgan interests in the market, as shown in the strength of the Erie and Southern Railway shares.

STEEL STOCKS, with the exception of Tennessee Coal, held fairly steady. The Tennessee issue, however, was very weak, selling down at one time 5 points from the high figure of the day and closing distinctly heavy. The weakness was attributed to the rumor that the next dividend on the common stock might be passed. Official information is to the effect that there is no warrant or justification for any such report.
Not much importance was attached to the statement from Boston that the Occidental Development Company of that city will enter the coal field in competition with the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, the Boston company having coal lands near Laveta, Col. Officials of Colorado Fuel said that they did not fear the competition.
Federal Steel was bought on the reported excellent business conditions, while Steel and Wire held well on the announcement that proxies were being steadily sent in to the movers in the effort to secure an honest management for the company.

DENVER AND RIO GRANDE'S strength followed the declaration of a dividend of 2½ per cent. on the preferred stock, an increase of one-half of 1 per cent. The earnings of the company for the six months ending Dec. 31, November and December estimated, as officially reported, show a surplus applicable for dividends of $322,000, which is equal to nearly 4 per cent. on the preferred stock.

SUGAR TRUST stock was one of the heaviest on the list, selling down 3 points from the high figure. The movement was not explained by any news developments, unless it was the continued illness of President Havemeyer. Room traders were active sellers.

ERIE SHARES were, as on the previous days, a feature of the market, being absorbed by Morgan interests and banking houses close to the management of the property. London also was a buyer of the shares, their advance being attended by the statement that a dividend on the first preferred stock is in sight.

AMERICAN SMELTER'S common stock was moved up on the report that the negotiations in respect to the consolidation with the Guggenheim interests, which have been dragging for some time, have practically been concluded. A meeting to take action on the matter is to be held Dec. 16.

ST. JOSEPH AND GRAND ISLAND shares were very strong, the first preferred advancing 4½ points and the second preferred 1¾. It was stated during the day that the first preferred will at the next meeting of the Directors be placed on a 5 per cent. dividend basis, but no official confirmation was obtainable.

GREEN BAY AND WESTERN advanced 7 points on transactions involving 300 shares. No reason was offered for the advance other than a scarcity of stock.

The buying the Wabash securities was on the report that interest payment on the Debenture B bonds is to be begun shortly, and that new traffic relations, which the road is entering into, will assure much larger revenues. Interests identified with the property were purchasers yesterday.

In connection with the steady absorption of Atchison shares, one Western operator alone has bought 50,000 shares of the two stocks this week. The popular opinion is that Mr. Gates is the operator in question, but this is authoritatively denied.

There was a disposition to sell People's Gas on the report that the company would be called upon to pay more taxes under the adjustment by the Chicago Board of Equalization. President Billings of the company says that the extra amount to be paid will be not more than $28,000, "not enough," he says, "to be at all significant."

The decline in New York Central was on the face of the November report, showing earnings from operation of $4,369,223, an increase of $73,730. On the other hand, Norfolk and Western advanced, following the announcement that in the fourth week of November earnings increased $18,810.

Call money again touched 6 per cent., but the rise was only temporary, most of the day's loans being made at 4½ per cent. It is said that at between 4 and 5 per cent. much out-of-town money is being offered.

Conferences of United States Rubber Directors have been held this week and another meeting is scheduled for to-day. It is believed that some important matters are being considered, but no information can be obtained.

RAILWAY SURPLUSES.

In the absence of anything like a uniform system of accounting among American railways, it is with great difficulty that specific items can be quoted for fair comparison between various properties. In the item of "fixed charges," for example, there is difference in every quarter as to what properly goes to make it up. Some railways include lease rentals, and some add taxes, and yet others a variety of other charges; while there are many corporations which insist still upon restricting the item to the matter of interest upon funded debt. In most instances, however, the rules now prevailing were the rules in force ten years ago, and thus for practical purposes of comparison (as to individual properties) the figures officially presented are of value, and herewith are such reports for important railroads during the decade from 1890 up to 1900, the following "fixed charges" showing increases in all but three of the quoted properties:

Atchison	$7,703,000	$5,188,000
Baltimore & Ohio	6,209,500	6,360,000
Burlington	6,444,000	9,013,000

Anti-Trust Bill in German Reichstag.

BERLIN, Dec. 6.—In the Reichstag today Baron von Heyl and other leaders of the National-Liberals moved the introduction of the Anti-Trust bill, providing for the establishment of a practical system of supervision by the Imperial authorities over combinations and syndicates whose business can be proved to be a monopoly.

Several interesting statements were made during the discussion of the causes of the coal famine. Herr Sachse, Socialist, said he wanted to see the coal mines fiscalized. Herr Kamp, Centrist, thought Prussia should purchase enough coal mines in Westphalia to acquire a determining influence upon the action of the syndicate.

Herr Brefeld, Prussian Minister of Commerce and Industry, in replying, said he favored the idea that the State should gain such an influence, but that the project could not be carried out successfully in Westphalia, although it might be in Upper Silesia.

THE RIO GRANDE WESTERN.

The annual report of the Rio Grande Western Railway Company was made public yesterday. The receipts from operation were the largest in the history of the company, exceeding those of last year by 34½ per cent., while net earnings increased 4½ per cent., the increase in mileage operated being only 6 per cent. The operating expenses (which were 60.21 per cent. of the receipts) show, as might be expected from the gain of nearly 50 per cent. in the tonnage handled, and of over 25¾ per cent. in the number of passengers carried, a large increase in nearly all of the departments, the average increase being a little over 30 per cent.

President Palmer says that the physical condition of the road is better than ever before; 440,000 passengers, an increase of 25¾ per cent., were carried without any accidents. The freight tonnage was 1,631,676 tons, an increase of 49 per cent. The total receipts per mile average $7,276, while the net earnings averaged $2,686. The length of line is 620 miles. The capital reserve shows that there are in the treasury of the company, of first mortgage 4 per cent. consolidated gold bonds, $2,484,800, besides $500,000 bonds issuable on account of the past fiscal year, but not issued on June 30, 1900, $260,000. First mortgage 4 per cent. bonds of the Utah Central Railroad Company, also 10,000 shares of the stock of the Western Express Company, earning and dividing 4½ per cent. for the year, and an authorization for a further issue of common stock, amounting to $5,000,000.

A NEW VAPOR LIGHT.

Report that Peter Cooper Hewitt Has Made Important Discovery.

Peter Cooper Hewitt, son of ex-Mayor Abram S. Hewitt, is said to have discovered a commercial vapor light, which promises to revolutionize the lighting of the world. Mr. Hewitt said to a TIMES reporter who called on him at his laboratory, in the tower of Madison Square Garden, yesterday:

"I have been making experiments along certain lines, and, while I will not say that I have discovered a new light, I know I have demonstrated that such a light can be secured. I am not ready yet to give out the details, but just so soon as I can I will surely let THE TIMES know about it."

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading in the market for outside securities yesterday developed little activity and resulted in few changes of importance. The market was probably narrower than on any day recently, and a still smaller number of issues than those that were prominent on Wednesday supplied the bulk of the day's trading. General Carriage and Bay State Gas were actively dealt in, but in the more substantial issues transactions were on a smaller scale than heretofore. The dullness was accompanied by some recessions in price. The copper stocks showed some slight improvement, but supplied only a small part of the day's business.

AMERICAN WOOLEN, which for some time past has been one of the most active of the industrials, showed a total of less than 1,000 shares, and on these transactions it declined three-eighths of a point. The preferred stock was still duller, but was practically unchanged from the previous day's price.

CONSOLIDATED EQUIPMENT remained strong, but did not show much activity. Early transactions were made as high as 12½, but the bulk of the trading was at 12. At this figure there seemed to be large demand for the stock.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was stronger than it had been for some days, and both issues advanced fractionally. The preferred stock sold as high as 23½ and made a net gain of 1 point, while the common stock closed at 5⅝ bid, against 5¼ bid the previous day.

UNITED RAILWAYS OF ST. LOUIS was weak, and the preferred stock sold at the lowest figure that has been recorded for the issue. On the sale of a few hundred shares, the price dropped to 60, but at the close recovered a full point to 61. The bonds were also somewhat weak, but no transactions in them were reported. St. Louis Transit closed at 15⅝ bid, with no sales.

BAY STATE GAS was traded in to the extent of a number of thousands of shares, on which it advanced from 1⅛ to 1⅜. At the close, however, the stock was again offered at 1¼, and it showed no net gain for the day.

OTIS ELEVATOR was under pressure, which forced the common stock down fractionally and lowered the preferred stock about 1½ points. Trading in both issues was light.

Closing quotations yesterday, compared with those of the previous day, were as follows:

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rates of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1,000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

HAY CANAL TREATY MAY BE KILLED

No Ratification Without Amendment—That Change May Kill It.

TEST VOTE ON NEXT THURSDAY

Fortification Clause to be Decided Then —Senator Teller Argues for a Change He Proposes.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Those Senators who have been watching the progress of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty through the Senate, or in the Senate, for it is not yet certain that it will go through, admit that they do not expect to see it ratified, unless amended so as to permit the United States to fortify the canal, but they are at a loss to understand why this concession should be demanded as a condition of approval. On the other hand, it is not certain that amendment will not defeat ratification. An agreement reached to-day to vote on the amendment next Thursday is regarded by friends of the amendment as an assurance that the amendment will be adopted and that immediately after the treaty will be ratified. It is a dilemma. The treaty cannot get enough votes if not amended. It may not get votes enough if it is amended.

The report was circulated at the Senate this afternoon that the President had intimated his willingness that the treaty should be amended rather than that it should fail without an amendment. This report cannot be corroborated at the Department of State, where it is suggested that it would be an almost intolerable thing, after the United States had sought to modify the Clayton-Bulwer convention by the regular diplomatic course, to throw over the terms which it had accepted and which are considered to be a perfectly fair disposition of a matter that has been a standing cause of irritation for years. That further irritation will be felt in Great Britain after the Hay-Pauncefote treaty has been amended in disregard of the Clayton-Bulwer convention, is not only expected, but is courted by some of the Senators who have spoken in Executive session in a way to indicate that they believe that the United States Government, through the Department of State, has been victimized and led into abandonment of the Monroe doctrine.

Senator Morgan, whose chief interest in securing the ratification of the treaty is to open the way for prosecuting work on the Nicaragua Canal, still believes that under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the United States, with its navy, could defend its rights in the canal quite as effectually as it could by erecting an unbroken line of forts from Greytown to Brito. The probability of an attempt to employ the canal for warlike purposes seems to him to be as small as in the case of the Suez Canal. He understands the purport of Article 10 in a way quite different from that in which it is taken by Senator Lodge, and only those Senators who [illegible] favor arming the canal against possible foreign foes find any parallel between the permission to allow the Sovereign of Egypt to protect a canal in his own territory and a proposition to permit the United States to fortify a canal in Nicaragua, a foreign country.

The developments in the Senate in executive session to-day in connection with the Hay-Pauncefote treaty were:

An agreement on the part of the Senate to vote on the amendment offered by the Committee on Foreign Relations providing for the policing of the canal on next Thursday at 3 o'clock.

An amendment offered by Senator Teller striking out the treaty prohibition against the fortification of the Nicaragua Canal when constructed.

The conclusion of Senator Morgan's speech.

A speech by Senator Teller in opposition to the treaty.

The agreement for a vote on the committee amendment was secured soon after the executive session began. It was reached by unanimous consent, as the result of a request made by Senator Lodge, who did not ask to have a date fixed for a vote upon the treaty itself, believing that the fate of the measure will be determined by the result of the vote upon the amendment.

Senator Morgan in his speech went over the same ground covered by him yesterday, saying he desired simply to clear up some misapprehension concerning his position.

Senator Teller spoke for about two hours, giving notice of his amendment at the beginning of his address. The amendment suggested relates to Section 7 of Article 2 of the treaty. As that section now stands it reads as follows:

No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. The United States shall be at liberty to maintain such military police as may be necessary to protect the canal and the waters adjacent to be free from lawlessness and disorder.

The Colorado Senator's amendment provides for the striking out of the first sentence of this provision and for verbal changes in the remaining portion, making it read as follows:

The United States shall be at liberty to maintain such military force along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

Mr. Teller contended that if the United States desired to build the canal it should proceed to do so without trying to secure the consent of Great Britain. He said that the opinion of Secretary Hay that the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was necessary as a preceding performance after all was only the opinion of one man, and he quoted from public documents to show that former Secretaries of State had differed in their opinions in this respect. He also showed that in some instances there had been breaches of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

He quoted Secretary Evarts as saying that "the guarantee of neutrality is one thing while the question is unsettled, and quite another when the canal shall be opened to the interests, ambition, and cupidity of the commercial nations and is occupied by populations of foreign allegiance and discordant habits." Secretary Blaine also was quoted on the same point.

Replying to Senator Morgan, Senator Teller expressed the opinion that Great Britain would never permit her resentment of independent action by the United States to lead her to begin hostilities, because her material interests in maintaining peace with this country are too great; but he argued that to ask Great Britain's assent to the construction of the canal was to admit that that country had a right to express its dissent. That position, he said, never would be accepted by the people of this country.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock to-day transmitted to Congress, in accordance with law, the annual report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, dated Dec. 3, 1900, at New York. Since the organization of the company $1,170,800 has been paid into its treasury, while for property, material, machinery, construction, and labor $1,163,010 has been expended. It has issued 180,000 shares of stock of the par value of $18,000,000, in payment for concessions, privileges, franchises, and other property.

No work has been done upon the canal during the past year because of difficulty between the company and the State of Nicaragua over a canal concession granted to another company and the forfeiting of the Maritime Canal Company's contract by Nicaragua. The report gives a history of this matter and of the protests made to the State Department, whose intervention was asked "for the protection of the property and rights of the company against these unjust acts of the Government of Nicaragua."

HOW RATHBONE SPENT MONEY.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Senator Platt of Connecticut, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Relations with Cuba, to-day made public the statement prepared by the Auditing Division of the War Department showing the expenditures made by E. G. Rathbone, late Director of the Department of Posts for Cuba. The total disallowances for the sixteen months were $72,631.

The first disallowance was on account of an expenditure of $850 for a Duchess carriage, made on Feb. 28, 1899. After that time there were frequent disbursements for the Director General's carriage service. March 20 he paid $202 for a set of harness and carriage "auxiliaries"; April 7, $12 for a Jipijapa hat and for another hat for his coachman with rosettes, and on the same date $306 for harness, &c. Rent for the coachman, stable, &c., seems to have been regularly paid out of the public funds at the rate of $110 per month, and in one or two instances the hostler's salary was thus supplied. All the coach furnishings were provided in this way. In May, 1899, a uniform costing $40, a pair of boots costing $15, and another hat costing $9 were bought for the coachman. June 9 a rain coat costing $26 was supplied to that individual. The coach later was supplied with rubber tires at an expense to the public of $100. In addition, there were many miscellaneous charges for stable rent and for carriage and car hire.

Attorneys and notaries were paid $110 for services in connection with the leasing of Mr. Rathbone's residence. There were also charges for plumbing and papernanging at the residence and for a chandelier in the billiard room of that establishment. In one case rent for a house was paid from the public funds. The house also appears to have been furnished at the cost of the public. In December of 1899 and January of 1900 several bills were paid to New York and Washington firms by Rathbone, one aggregating $925, another $268, one $123, one $121, and another $1,581. The last bill includes 240 entries and covers many articles of domestic use, such as clothes, gloves, scarfs, toilet articles, cuspidors, champagne and other wine glasses, tableware, kitchen utensils, bedsteads, bedroom sets, bedclothing, &c. In one case shirts, collars, and cuffs were charged to the Government.

DEMOCRATS OPPOSE BYNUM.

Because the Indiana Man Left Their Party Senators Will Try to Keep Him Out of Office.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Ex-Representative William D. Bynum is having a hard time trying to get into office. He was nominated during the last session of Congress to be a member of the Board of General Appraisers, and the Democrats of the Senate refused to accept him as a person fully answering to the requirement of the law that a certain proportion of the board shall be of the minority party. Mr. Bynum was charged with having ceased to be a Democrat, and as having thus disqualified himself to take the place of a Democrat. Last Summer or Fall he came out as a supporter of the President for re-election, and since the campaign ended has declared his doubt about the possibility of reorganizing the Democratic Party, and his declared his intention to act with the Republicans. President McKinley has, since Congress convened, named him to be a member of the commission to codify the civil and criminal laws of the United States. That nomination is to fill a vacancy created by the death of David R. Culberson of Texas, who was a Democrat. This new offer of Mr. Bynum has been received with something like resentment by certain Democratic Senators who are determined that he shall not get into office as a Democrat after the public renunciation of the party by the act of their votes. They are aware that the Republicans have enough votes to confirm him if they are resolved to do so, but as the Democrats never pretend to obstruct the confirmation of Republicans nominated and feel that it is not only right but a duty to prevent Bynum's confirmation, they hope to induce the Republicans to take their view of the matter and compel the President to find a Democrat to take the place vacated by a Democrat.

It is not maintained by the Democrats that the law providing for the Confication Commissioners specified that there should be any Democrats appointed.

MR. YERKES'S LONDON ROAD.

H. C. Davis of the brokerage firm of A. A. Housman & Co., who has been in London representing the Yerkes syndicate, which is to build the new underground railway in that city, returned on the Hamburg-American liner Deutschland yesterday. Concerning the proposed road Mr. Davis said:

"The work of construction is likely to begin now at any moments. It will be about eight miles in length. The tubes will be wider than the Central London Underground Railway, and electric motive power will be used. As intended to connect the different surface and underground railway systems of London. The Central London Road has been a great success, carrying approximately, 140,000 passengers a day. When the City Imperial Volunteers returned from South Africa the number traveling in one day reached a total of 246,000. The new system is to be known as the Charing Cross, Euston and Hampstead Railway. I can't say just how much the road will cost or how long it will take to build it."

Much Typhoid at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—In presenting a report of a committee of physicians upon the filtration of the water supplied to the City of Washington, in the Senate to-day, Mr. Gallinger adverted to the alarming prevalence of typhoid fever in the District of Columbia. He declared that the death rate in this city from that disease was seven or eight times as great as in European cities of the same class. The wells of the District had been closed, but the ravages of the fever had rather increased than diminished.

MR. PLATT'S POLICE BILL

Single-Headed Commission in Operation Before Feb. 1.

THE ORGANIZATION'S DECISION

Measure to be Speedily Passed—Commissioner Subject to the Governor's Power of Removal.

The Republican organization has decided on a Police bill for New York City. It will give the Governor power to remove the Commissioner without charges at any time.

Senator Thomas C. Platt announced last night that a decision had been reached.

"What will be the main features of the bill?" the Senator was asked.

"It will provide," replied the Senator, "for a police force for New York with a single-headed commission, to be appointed by the Mayor, but to the Governor will be given the power to remove the Commissioner without charges."

"Then there will be no State police measure?"

"No," answered Senator Platt. "Although many members of the Legislature up the State favor a bill applying to all the cities, the conclusion has been reached that a bill applying to New York alone will be best.

"But," added the Senator, with emphasis, "any kind of a Police bill favored by the organization could be passed."

"When will the bill be introduced?"

"Just as soon as the Legislature assembles," was the Senator's reply, "and it will be passed without delay. All the details have not yet been worked out."

"How about a successor to Commissioner Jacob Hess?"

"It is not likely," Senator Platt remarked, "that the organization will recommend any one for appointment. The new measure will become a law so speedily that there is no necessity for making an appointment to succeed Mr. Hess."

It is stated that the new police law will be in operation before Feb. 1. After it has been passed it must be sent to Mayor Van Wyck for approval, and he has fifteen days in which to act on it.

HARVARD DEBATERS WIN.

Murray Seasongood and R. C. Bruce Carry Off the Honors in Annual Contest with Yale.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 7.—The football supremacy may be Yale's, but the intellectual supremacy remains with Harvard for another year as the result of the annual debate this evening in Sanders Theatre on the subject of the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands. As a result Harvard, too, had her celebration rather less boisterous than the recent one in New Haven, but nevertheless enthusiastic, bright with red lights, melodious through the playing of "Up the Street" by the Harvard band, with cheers galore and a procession around the yard.

It was an easy victory for Harvard, the decision of the judges being unanimous and decisive as to both form in delivery and logic and matter in argument. Two Harvard speakers broke records. R. C. Bruce, 1900, of Indianapolis, making the best long speech ever delivered in an intercollegiate debate, and Murray Seasongood, 1901, Law, of Cincinnati, giving the most telling rebuttal speech of any debate. Mr. Seasongood turned the tide at a time when Harvard seemed overwhelmed with denials, and by an apt funny story, some clever discriminations, keen answers, and incisive argument brought the audience back to Harvard's side. It was a marvelous piece of work. After that Yale had no chance.

G. Morlan, 1900, of New Haven, was Yale's best speaker. He made an eloquent emotional appeal which was very effective with the audience. Unfortunately his flow of feeling carried him into making rash assertions which Seasongood later turned against him completely.

F. H. Sincerbeaux, 1902, of Moravia, N. Y., made a good opening speech for Yale, giving her best arguments. Hasan Trowbridge, 1902, of Chicago, Yale's last speaker in rebuttal, was unfortunate in coming between Seasongood and Bruce of Harvard and was out of their class. H. P. Chandler, 1900, of Indian Orchard, Mass., Harvard's other speaker, was only less good than his colleagues.

The debate abounded in pleasantness. The Harvard debaters quoted Yale professors on their side to the delight of the audience, and were themselves humiliated by having a Harvard professor quoted against them. Both sides quoted the same authorities to prove opposite arguments, and also got in an unqualified fling at the unreliability of newspapers, although both quoted them on every possible occasion. The debate was one of the liveliest and most interesting ever held.

In the serious arguments Harvard pinned her hopes to the incapacity of the Filipinos for self-government, and on the commercial advantages afforded in the growing Chinese trade by retaining them. With telling effect she threw the burden of proof on Yale by maintaining that she stood for the existing order of things, while Yale advocated a change. And finally the duty of the United States to the world was insisted upon to the extent of claiming that it made permanent retention necessary.

Yale said that permanent retention was unnecessary, undesirable, and unjustifiable; that the natives have the capacity for self-government; that the war will continue long and the expense always. And that because of our asserted alliance with the natives. It would be breaking faith with them not to grant them self-government. The judges were William B. Hornblower, Judge Addison Brown of the District Court, and Oscar S. Straus, Minister to Turkey.

RIOT AT ANTI-JEWISH PLAY.

Russian Students Stop Performance of "The Contrabandists."

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 7.—The first performance yesterday evening of an anti-Jewish play, entitled "The Contrabandists," led to an extraordinary demonstration. A portion of the audience at first angrily protested, and then hurled all kinds of missiles at the actors. Personal conflicts followed, and the performance had to be stopped.

The demonstration was led by 200 students who, besides filling the stage with missiles, kept up an incessant whistling and cat-calling. The police supported the theatre management for two hours, arresting, perhaps, fifty persons, but the public could not hear a word of the performance and the management finally yielded. Several scuffles took place between the demonstrators and the police, and it was evident that the public was largely with the students.

"The Contrabandists," formerly called "The Children of Israel," was written by Ofron, a baptized Jew, the plot dealing with alleged Jewish criminals and smugglers. It was printed two years ago.

An attempt to produce it was similarly frustrated in Odessa, and several previous efforts to bring it out here were prevented by the refusal of the actors to take the roles assigned them.

NURSE KILLS HER CHARGE

Alice O'Donnell, the Murderess, Escapes—Had Professed Affection for the Infant Victim.

Alice O'Donnell, a nurse in the employ of Mr. and Mrs. James Jones, who live in the apartment house at 127 Palmetto Street, Brooklyn, killed their only child, a boy of eighteen months, last night by cutting his throat with a razor. The murder was committed in the kitchen of the apartment while Mrs. Jones was singing for her husband in the parlor. The nurse, after finishing her deed, left the little victim lying on the floor with the razor by its side and fled.

The nurse, who is twenty-six years old, had been in the employ of the Jones family only since Thursday night. She had been known to the Joneses almost ever since their marriage, a little over two years ago, and they considered her capable and trustworthy. She had attended Mrs. Jones on several occasions during slight illnesses, and every time she came seemed to like the child, James Arthur, more and more. And so when the woman came on Thursday from her home in Jersey City, the boy was resigned to her care, and laughed gleefully when she played with and talked to him.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones last evening lingered longer than usual at the dinner table. It was 8 o'clock when they arose. The boy in the meantime had been fretful. The nurse said she would take him into the kitchen and quiet him, as she knew, she told Mrs. Jones, his crying would disturb her. Mr. and Mrs. Jones then withdrew to the parlor and Mrs. Jones sat down at the piano and sang a few songs. All was quiet in the kitchen. Not a sound came after the nurse had taken her charge away and the parents supposed that the boy had been put to bed.

Mrs. Jones at 9 o'clock had occasion to go to the kitchen, leaving her husband reading. She passed through the dining room and opened the kitchen door. There she stopped. The sight that met her eyes deprived her for a few seconds of all power of speech or movement. Before her on the floor lay the infant. The gas was burning brightly.

As soon as Mrs. Jones was able to articulate she managed to gasp out a sentence calling her husband to her side. The sight unnerved him.

In a few minutes Mr. Jones managed to summon some of his neighbors, and some of the women members of the families in the building hovered over Mrs. Jones, who was then in a state of collapse and did what they could for her, pending the arrival of a physician.

The police were notified as soon as possible, and several detectives came to the house. Mr. Jones subsequently discovered that the nurse was one of his own, which had been taken from a bureau drawer.

Mr. Jones told the detectives all he knew of the nurse. He said her home was in Jersey City. He did not remember the street, but said he could lead the detectives to the house where she lived. At about 11 o'clock, accompanied by the detectives, he started for Jersey City. So far as could be learned last night, the nurse had never shown any trait that led the family to believe she was insane or otherwise than reliable. Mr. Jones said he simply could not account for her action. He also told the detectives that the nurse, in a burst of confidence on Thursday, told his wife that she gave birth to a child eight months ago, and that it is now in an institution in Manhattan.

WARSHIPS GET RUSH ORDERS.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Dec. 7.—Admiral Kautz received orders this afternoon to sail without delay to "South America," and in accordance with these instructions preparations are now being hurriedly made for both the Iowa and Philadelphia to leave this port to-morrow.

The cause for this hurry order is not made public, but came as a great surprise to Admiral Kautz and all naval officers here.

Orders have been given to put 1,000 tons of coal on board the flagship for her cruise south, but this was canceled this afternoon, when only half the order had been delivered.

RICH STRIKE AT CRIPPLE CREEK

Large Ore Body Found at Depth of 850 Feet, in Second Zone.

Special to The New York Times.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Col., Dec. 7.—One of the biggest strikes, and by far the most important one, which has been made in the camp this year was entered at the depth of 850 feet in the Anaconda Company's workings to-day. At the depth of 400 feet below the tunnel level, in a drift, there are now five feet of ore, all of it showing sylvanite in abundance.

Assays indicate a value of about $1.20 a ton. For a distance of 500 feet a barren zone was run through. The discovery is very significant both for the Anaconda Company as well as for the entire camp. It has been the general belief that there was not a second zone.

JUDGMENT AGAINST FISHER.

Custom House Employe Must Pay Up or Work Out Amount.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Dec. 7.—In the Civil Court of Common Pleas here to-day judgment was obtained against George P. Fisher, an employe of the New York Custom House, in favor of the East Portchester School District of Greenwich for the misappropriation of several hundred dollars' worth of school funds. Fisher cried like a child as the judgment was announced. He was taken back to jail, where he will remain for a sufficient time to enable him to secure funds to pay up, or work it out at $1 a day. He may then be tried in a criminal court for embezzlement, and sent to State prison for a term of years.

Fisher was taken by his bondsman, W. R. Monroe of Cos Cob, aided by Deputy Sheriff Fitzroy of Greenwich, from the sidewalk in front of the New York Custom House Tuesday afternoon and landed in Bridgeport Jail.

TUG CREW'S DESPERATE STRUGGLE FOR LIFE

Little Vessel Was Shattered by a Wave in a Hurricane.

For Two Days All Hands Bailed Unceasingly, and Then When Help Came One of Them Was Lost.

Four shipwrecked seamen, survivors of the crew of the tug John W. Deering of Beaufort, S. C., were brought into port on the brig C. C. Sweeney, Capt. Miller, yesterday. They had been picked up in an exhausted condition off Cape Hatteras on the morning of Tuesday, Nov. 27. The tug was caught in a storm, during which a great wave battered in her sides, tore open the seams in her bottom, and severed her steampipe connections, rendering the engine useless. For two days and nights the crew had been bailing unceasingly in an effort to keep the vessel afloat, when help came. Engineer D. W. Douglass of Charleston was lost just as he was about to be rescued by the Sweeney. A wife and a little child survive him in his Southern home.

The tug, the rescued seamen said, sailed from Elizabeth, N. C., for Beaufort, S. C., on Nov. 24. The crew consisted of Capt. Charles Stephens, the owner of the ill-fated craft; Engineer Douglas, who was lost; William Von Harten, Reuben Drano, and Emanuel Faby. The weather was ideal until the 25th, when the ocean voyage to the South Carolina lowlands began. In the afternoon the wind arose slowly from the southeast, and soon was blowing a gale that steadily gained in strength.

By 10 o'clock that night a hurricane was raging, and the tug began to labor heavily. Great seas, high enough and strong enough to stagger an ocean liner, were beating against her sides and sweeping across her deck. The vessel was tossed about as though she had been a piece of cork, and the Captain and crew realized that unless the fury of the storm soon abated the tug would be lost.

Morning dawned, but with it the violence of the elements increased. The diminutive vessel gallantly held her own, however, until 9 o'clock at night, when she was suddenly rendered helpless. A wave of tremendous size and terrific strength struck her square and full on the side and then broke completely over her, carrying away the pilot house, smashing the deck houses, opening the seams, and starting bad leaks instantly all over the vessel. The water poured into the little engine room, disconnected or fractured different portions of the machinery, and put out the fires under the boilers, leaving the battered craft absolutely at the mercy of the storm.

From this time until the rag that was hoisted as a signal of distress was sighted by the Sweeney, the tug drifted helplessly in the gale. The crew was not large enough to form into relays to bail out the inpouring water, so every man was put at work to aid in keeping what was left of the vessel above water. Throughout this night and Monday, until Tuesday morning, struggle for life never fagged for an instant. When the welcoming sail of the Sweeney hove in sight Tuesday the men were not only famished but completely exhausted.

The Sweeney tacked and bore in toward the tug. When near enough, lines were thrown, and the Deering's men, jumping into the water, grasped the ropes, and all save Douglass were hauled on board. The engineer did not have the necessary strength to hold on, and before assistance could reach him disappeared beneath the water.

Dry clothes and food were furnished to the men by the Sweeney's skipper, and, leaving the battered hulk of the tug to the mercy of the Cape Hatteras storm, the Sweeney resumed her course and stretched away for New York.

ASSERTS HE WAS BLACKLISTED.

In Striker's Suit Court Refuses to Order Railway to Produce List.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, Dec. 7.—A motion in an important case was heard and overruled by Judge Ricks of the United States court yesterday afternoon. The litigation will interest union men, as the plaintiff, August A. Hickerson, one of the American Railway Union strikers, seeks damages from Messrs. Cowan and Murray, formerly receivers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway for alleged blacklisting.

Hickerson's attorneys sought to have the Court order the railway to present what is described as some very strong evidence against itself. The motion asked that the railway be required to produce the records of the General Managers' Association, names of members, portions of the by-laws, the report of the committee that investigated the American Railway Union strike, the number of men furnished railways by the employment bureau of the association, and last, but most important, the "black list" of the Illinois Central Railway.

It is said that the Illinois Central Railway black list reads: "The undermentioned men of the transportation department have been discharged, or have left the service under circumstances rendering it undesirable for them to be re-employed by this company, and should they apply to you you are requested to deny them employment without first conforming to Rule —."

It is charged that this blacklist contains the names of 500 strikers.

CREDITOR GETS THE WALHALLA.

Suit for Castellane Yacht Decided in French Court.

PARIS, Dec. 8.—The Civil Tribunal at Havre has decided the question of the legality of the seizure of the Walhalla, the yacht of the Comtesse Boni de Castellane, by M. Davillier, the Paris banker, who holds a bill of 750,000f. in favor of the creditor.

Davillier asked that the vessel now moored at the Commercial Dock be sold within as short a time as possible.

The Walhalla cost the Comte 850,000 francs, and a further sum of 300,000 francs has been expended since on the fittings.

Simon Blum, seventy-three years old, a retired merchant, who lived at 76 West One Hundred and Third Street, died suddenly yesterday morning from apoplexy. He was for many years connected with a clothing firm in Franklin Street. Two weeks ago, while visiting his daughter, Mrs. Henry Seigel, 24 West Ninety-fourth Street, Mr. Blum, in reaching for a match, fell and struck his head against the corner of a chair, causing a scalp wound.

Mrs. Blum learned yesterday that her brother had also just died in Germany, where he resided.

NEW TRANSCONTINENTAL LINE.

Charter for an Extension of the Rock Island to El Paso Submitted for Approval in Texas.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas., Dec. 7.—An important step toward the building of a new transcontinental railroad line was taken to-day in the presentation to the Attorney General of Texas for approval of the charter of the Chicago, Rock Island and Mexico Railroad Company, which road is to be a part of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific system.

The charter provides for the extension of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Road from its present Southwestern terminus at Liberal, Kan., to White Oaks, New Mexico, where it will connect with the El Paso and Northeastern Railroad, running from White Oaks to El Paso, Texas, a distance of 144 miles. The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific has just purchased the El Paso and Northeastern Road, and the deal will be formally ratified by the Board of Directors of the former company at their meeting, to be held in New York City Dec. 15.

The proposed extension from Liberal, Kan., to White Oaks will be about 400 miles long, of which 110 miles will be in Texas. While the charter of the Chicago, Rock Island and Mexico Railroad Company only provides for the building of the road to White Oaks, another charter will be taken out for the building of an extension west from El Paso to California, through New Mexico and Arizona, unless arrangements for an equitable interchange of business at El Paso can be made with the Southern Pacific.

The stockholders of the Chicago, Rock Island and Mexico Railroad Company are the same as those of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific.

REMEMBERS HIS EARLY HOME.

G. H. Swift, the Wealthy Packer, Gets Young People from Cape Cod.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—One Chicago man has remembered the young men and women of his native village, in the days of his own success. He is Gustavus H. Swift, the wealthy packer. Mr. Swift has sent back to Cape Cod, where he received his early education in a log schoolhouse, and where he began his business career as an itinerant meat vender, an invitation to young people to come to Chicago and work in his establishment.

He promised rapid advancement where ability and worth are shown. In all, nearly 200 young men and women from Barnstable County have accepted. Many are from Sagamore, the principal village, formerly Mr. Swift's home.

CHICAGO SHORT OF EGGS.

Price Goes Up to 27 Cents a Dozen—Cold Storage Stocks Low.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—There continues to be a scarcity of eggs in the local market, and prices are still on the rise. Fresh eggs were marked up 1 cent a dozen to-day, and the best stock is now selling at 27 cents. A cold wave within the next day or so, dealers say, would force the price still higher.

Owing to the extremely small offerings of fresh stock, cold storage eggs are being used extensively by all classes of buyers. But even the stocks of the latter are small, and holders are realizing profits, as eggs which were bought last Spring at 10 or 11 cents are now selling at 20 to 21 cents a dozen.

EUROPE TO HEAR OF CHICAGO.

Real Estate Men Will Advertise the City to Interest Manufacturers.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—Chicago is to be advertised in Europe. Advertisements are to appear in all the leading newspapers stating that the Chicago Real Estate Board is ready to furnish full information concerning manufacturing sites available in the vicinity of the city. Inquiries resulting from these advertisements are to be sent by copy to each member of the board, so correspondence can proceed directly between realty holders and intending purchasers.

The plan is the suggestion of Nelson Thomasson, who called attention to a report that Seybold & Dickstod, English manufacturers of crucible iron, were looking for a site for a $3,000,000 plant in some part of the United States where coal and ore could be obtained cheap. A committee has, therefore, been appointed to deal with such cases and carry out the advertising scheme mentioned. Of this committee R. E. Ismond is Chairman, Nelson Thomasson, E. A. Cummings, B. A. Fessenden, and R. F. Walker, are members.

Priest Wins from Mayor Harrison.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—Mayor Harrison and Father George D. Heldmann of St. Paul's Church with rifles over their shoulders gravely paced off the distance on the green at Sharpshooters' Park Wednesday afternoon. Then a target was raised and the priest and the Mayor wasted many rounds of ammunition. At 50 yards bullet from the priest's rifle struck the white bull's-eye. "I win!" exclaimed Father Heldmann. "I guess you do," said the Mayor. Then the Mayor and the priest enjoyed a dinner, for which the Mayor paid. A week ago the two were opponents in target practice at the same place, and the city executive beat the priest.

SENATOR DEPEW'S TRIBUTE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—To Senator Depew the news of Horace J. Hayden's death came as a great shock. The Senator and Mr. Hayden had been intimately associated a great many years. Mr. Depew had heard nothing directly to-night regarding his former colleague's death, the only information he had received on the subject being from reporters. He said:

"Mr. Hayden has had a long, honorable, and successful career in the railroad business, and was regarded as probably the ablest traffic man in the United States.

"Personally he was a very genial, charming man, and very fond of music. He leaves a wife, sons, and two daughters.

"I can't say anything as to his successor in office. That matter will be determined by the Board of Directors, who may continue the office or not, as they see fit. If it is filled it will be by promotion."

HORACE J. HAYDEN'S CRUSHED BODY FOUND

Sudden Death of the Central's Second Vice President.

HIS ACCIDENTAL FALL FATAL

Horace J. Hayden, Second Vice President of the New York Central Railroad, was instantly killed last evening at his residence, 337 West Seventy-sixth Street, by falling from a third-story window.

The first his family knew of the accident was when, shortly after 7 o'clock, two servants, Bessie Lynch and Lizzie McCauley, found the body of Mr. Hayden lying in the yard in the rear of the house. A third-story window was open, and it was not known at first whether Mr. Hayden fell out of the window or jumped out.

As soon as the body was found it was carried into the house and a messenger dispatched for Dr. Walter Jones of 202 West Seventy-fourth Street. On his arrival, Dr. Jones pronounced Mr. Hayden dead.

The case was not reported to the police until a couple of hours later, when a reporter, who had learned of the death of Mr. Hayden, entered the West Sixty-eighth Street Police Station and informed Sergt. Russell. Roundsman McNaught was sent to the house, but all information except Mr. Hayden's name and age was refused. Detectives Armstrong and Deering of the same station were then sent out to make an investigation.

THE PHYSICIAN'S STATEMENT.

Attempts were made later in the evening to see members of the family, but they were unsuccessful. The following statement, however, was given out to reporters at the house:

"Mr. H. J. Hayden had been under medical care for some months for heart disease and cardiac dyspnoea. He was subject to attacks of shortness of breath, and it is supposed that during one of these attacks he raised the window and lost his balance.

Cyrus Clark, a real estate dealer, living at 327 West Seventy-sixth Street, and an intimate friend of the Hayden family, received the reporters for Mrs. Hayden. He said:

Mr. Hayden had been under treatment for some time for heart trouble. He also suffered from nervous prostration, brought on possibly by overwork. He was feeling worse than usual lately, and had remained away from his office. He was not in bed, but remained in his room, on the third floor, back, and his wife tells me he was feeling so dizzy and faint this afternoon that he asked her to stay in the room with him.

"About half-past six it is supposed that he was suddenly taken with faintness, opened the window, and, losing his balance, fell on to the stone flagging, three floors below.

"The first I heard of the accident was shortly before 7 o'clock, when a colored servant came and told me. Mrs. Hayden and the family were so overwhelmed with grief that they asked me to give all the particulars of the sad affair to the press representatives."

RUMOR OF SUICIDE DENIED.

Questioned regarding an earlier report that Mr. Hayden might have jumped out of the window, Mr. Clark said:

"As far as I know, there is absolutely no foundation for the rumor. Mr. Hayden, to the best of my belief, had no business troubles of any kind. I regard it as an accident, pure and simple."

When picked up, Mr. Hayden was fully dressed and the body was yet warm. His head had been crushed in.

Dr. Robert A. Abbe, the family physician, and his assistant, Dr. Arthur L. Fisk of 13 West Fiftieth Street, were telephoned for, but did not arrive for some time. Drs. Abbé and Fisk remained at the house all the evening, attending Mrs. Hayden and her daughter.

The Coroner was notified, and this morning will view the body, which lies in Mr. Hayden's bedroom.

Mr. Hayden was born at Boston Sept. 11, 1840. He was

BIDS FOR NEW WARSHIPS

Great Shipbuilding Firms Contest for $50,000,000 in Work.

ELEVEN VESSELS TO BE BUILT

Figures Lower than Was Expected—Eight Bids Submitted—New Companies Enter the Field.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Never since the birth of the new navy has there been such a gathering of shipbuilders as was assembled in the office of the Secretary of the Navy at noon to-day to witness the opening of bids for an amount of naval construction which Secretary Long denominated as the greatest industrial event this or any other country had ever seen, involving the placing of contracts for about $50,000,000.

The bids were for the construction of five new battleships and six armored cruisers, aggregating a total displacement of 154,000 tons. The three battleships authorized by the act of March, 1899, were never contracted for, owing to delays in the procurement of armor bids, in the completion of designs, and controversy as to whether the new superposed turret should be used in their construction. Inability to reach a satisfactory conclusion in regard to sheathing delayed construction in the three armored cruisers authorized by the same acts. These points have been adjusted.

There were eight bidders, and most of the bids were well within the limit of cost allowed by Congress for the ships. The notable feature was an attempt on the part of the younger and smaller concerns to break the line of the old organizations, which have constructed all of the heavy vessels of the new navy up to this time.

While it is not possible at this moment to forecast results accurately, there are indications that in at least one instance, and perhaps two instances, these attempts will be attended with some degree of success, for it looks as though some of the work will be bestowed upon the Fore River Company, which appears for the first time as a bidder for constructing armored ships.

The Pacific Coast, too, presents a likely candidate in the Moran bids. Because of changes made in the specifications by the bidders, the general tendency of which is to reduce considerably the equipment of the ships, it is not possible yet to tell which of the bids is actually the lowest. As read, the bids are as follows:

ARMORED CRUISERS.

Union Iron Works, San Francisco: One, sheathed and copper-ed, $5,500,000; one without sheathing, $5,750,000; cruiser under the same conditions, $5,750,000.

William Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia, Penn.: One sheathed, not mucoppered, $5,890,000; one without sheathing, $5,785,000.

Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, one sheathed and copper-ed, $5,885,000; one without sheathing, $5,775,000; this for two ships.

Moran Brothers & Co., of Seattle, Washington: One sheathed and copper-ed, $4,132,000, or two at $4,000,000 each; one without sheathing, $3,-762,000, or two at $3,541,000 each.

Fore River Shipbuilding and Locomotive Works, Quincy, Mass.: One sheathed and copper-ed $5,975,000, or two at $5,950,000 each. Without sheathing, one at $5,800,000, or two at $5,775,000 each. The same bid also is made for two more ships at the same price and under the same conditions, under the act of 1900.

The preceding bidders, Moran & Brothers and the Newport News Company, made similar propositions.

BATTLESHIPS.

Cramp & Sons: One sheathed and coppered, $5,000,000.

Newport News Company: One sheathed and coppered, $5,595,000; one unsheathed, $5,540,000.

Fore River Works: One for $5,550,000, or two for $5,525,000 each, all sheathed and coppered. Without sheathing, one for $5,450,000, two for $5,425,000 each. A bid, also, is submitted for two more at the same price under the act of 1900.

New York Shipbuilding Company: One sheathed and coppered, $5,200,000, or two at $5,175,000 each. Without sheathing: One for $5,000,000, or two for $4,975,000 each. This firm offers to reduce the time limit of completion 18 months.

Moran Brothers & Co., Seattle, Washington: One sheathed and copper-ed, $5,550,000, or two at $5,250,000 each. Without sheathing: One for $5,287,000, or two for $5,250,000 each. Bids also are made for two more at the same price under the act of 1900. This firm also offers to reduce the time limit of completion 18 months.

Union Iron Works: One unsheathed, $3,460,000.

A naval board will consider the bids and report upon them. The acts of Congress limit the cost of the cruisers to $3,000,000 each, and of the battleships to $4,250,000 for the sheathed and $4,000,000 for the unsheathed.

Secretary Long expressed himself as pleased with the result of the bidding, so far as he could perceive it from the hasty reading of the bids. He felt that on the whole the latter were very liberal.

DETAILS OF THE BATTLESHIPS.

The five new battleships, namely the Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Georgia, Virginia, and Rhode Island, are divided into two classes, to compromise upon the controversy as to their turret systems. Three are to be sheathed and coppered, and will carry superimposed turrets; the other two are to be unsheathed vessels, having the "quadrilateral arrangement" of eight-inch turrets. To meet the contingency that the bids may be in excess of the authorized cost, the bidders were, however, invited to submit plans in each case for both sheathed and unsheathed ships.

Sheathed vessels are to be of 15,000 tons displacement, with a length of 435 feet, breadth of 76 feet 10 inches, and greatest draught of 23 feet. The unsheathed ships are slightly smaller, and on the same length are 72 inches narrower, and 400 tons less displacement. Both classes of battleships will compare with any in the world, not only afloat, but projected, for they will have a speed of at least 19 knots an hour, which is expected to run up to 19½, a great pace for a battleship, which will be maintained by twin screw engines of 10,000 horse power, supplied by twenty-four water tube boilers.

The radical difference in the battleships to the outward appearance will lie in the turrets. Each ship will carry four 12-inch guns. These are of the extraordinary length of forty calibres or twenty feet in the bore, of the new type just turned out by the Ordnance Bureau, and superior in efficiency to any twelve-inch gun in the world, and at least equal to the thirteen-inch guns which have marked the maximum calibre in the American Navy. In the three sheathed vessels a pair of eight-inch guns will be mounted on top of each of the twelve-inch turrets. Four other eight-inch guns will be distributed in two turrets amidships on these two vessels.

The unsheathed vessels will have all of their eight eight-inch guns mounted in four independent turrets, one placed at each corner of the oblong superstructure. Both classes of vessels, sheathed and unsheathed, will have as a broadside of twelve six-inch rapid-fire guns on the main deck, besides twelve fourteen-pounders and twelve two-pounders, and a number of automatic guns, making the battery more formidable than any afloat as far as ability to concentrate fire and throw weight of metal is concerned.

In the matter of defensive power the battleships of both classes are unsurpassed, carrying an eight-foot wide water line belt of armor, 11 inches thick over the vitals of the ship, tapering to 4 inches at the ends. The six-inch guns will be placed behind the protection of six inches of solid hardened steel and the turrets will vary from 10 to 11 inches in thickness. A reserved turtleback protective deck and a cofferdam belt all around the water line stuffed with cellulose will afford further protection. Electricity will be used in the battleships to much greater extent than in any other ships afloat and the use of wood will be restricted to the minimum.

THE PROPOSED NEW CRUISERS.

The six armored cruisers represent the highest development of the naval constructor's art, for Chief Constructor Hichborn has not only managed to design in them ships as fleet as any foreign navy can boast, but has endowed them with the qualities of battleships at many points. Three of these ships are to be sheathed and three are to be unsheathed. Of a less displacement than the battleships, 13,800 tons in the case of the sheathed, and 13,300 in the case of the unsheathed cruisers, these vessels are still considerably longer being 502 feet on the water line, with a breadth of 70 feet and a draft of 26 feet 6 inches.

Quadruple twin screw engines of 23,000 horse power, supplied by thirty boilers, will propel these great ships at a minimum speed of 22 knots per hour, and with capacities for 2,000 tons of coal in her bunkers, their endurance will surpass that of any similar foreign vessels. Each cruiser will carry four eight-inch guns in Hichborn balanced turrets, four six-inch guns in sponsons at each corner of the superstructure, and ten six-inch broadside guns, besides the usual secondary battery. Six inches of hardened steel will extend in a belt around the ships, 7 feet 6 inches broad, and the guns in the citadel and superstructure are proportionately protected. A heavy protective deck and cofferdam belt complete the protection.

BILL AGAINST POLYGAMY.

Congressman Tayler Introduces Measure to Make Laws on Marriage and Divorce Uniform.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Representative Tayler, (Rep., Ohio,) who was prominently identified in the movement to exclude Brigham H. Roberts of Utah from a seat in Congress, to-day introduced a measure intended to bring about Federal prohibition of polygamy. It proposes a Constitutional amendment for uniform laws on marriage and divorce.

Mr. Tayler says, however, that his aim goes considerably beyond a mere uniformity of such laws, and is expressly designed to reach polygamy, and put an end to it. He regards this form of remedy as the most effective and far-reaching.

The measure was introduced after conference of those interested in the subject, and although Mr. Taylor is not on the Judiciary Committee, which will have charge of the measure, it was deemed desirable to have him present the matter and direct the active movement which will begin on its behalf.

WATERWAY TO THE SEA.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The complete report of the Deep Waterways Commission was sent to the House of Representatives to-day by Secretary Root. The project before the commission is one of vast magnitude, for a deep waterway and routes between the great lakes and Atlantic tidewater. The estimated cost of a twenty-one-foot waterway is given at $206,-238,284; and of a thirty-foot waterway at $317,284,500. An additional estimate is made for deepening the harbors at Chicago and Duluth, making the total aggregate for the thirty-foot channel of $325,892,000. The cost of annual maintenance of the twenty-one-foot waterway is given at $2,343,478, and of the thirty-foot waterway $2,830,308.

The most favorable route, the commission states, for a thirty-foot waterway from the lakes to the sea is from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario, via Lasalle and Lewiston, and from Lake Ontario to the Hudson River via Oswego and the Mohawk Valley, and that the same route is practically as favorable as any for the twenty-one-foot waterway.

It is also pointed out by the commission that this route is entirely in our own country. The following conclusions are stated: "As a result of this investigation, it appears that the twenty-one-foot waterway promises a much greater return of value relative to its cost than the thirty-foot waterway. The main advantages of the thirty-foot waterway are that it would furnish the lowest cost of transportation proper to foreign markets and permit the construction of the largest seagoing vessels on the lakes."

The report is signed by Lieut. Col. Raymond and Alfred Noble and George Y. Wisner, constituting the commission.

Presidential Nominations.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The President to-day sent the following nominations to the Senate:

Col. John F. Weston, Assistant Commissary General of Subsistence, to be Commissary General of Subsistence, with rank of Brigadier General.

Capt. Frank B. McKenna, Forty-seventh Infantry, United States Volunteers, (First Lieutenant, Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army,) to be Inspector General of Volunteers, with rank of Major.

Congressional Notes.

The bill authorizing the appointment of Representative Boutelle of Maine as a Captain on the retired list of the navy, upon his resignation from Congress, has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Naval Affairs, over which Mr. Boutelle presided until his present affliction.

The Military Academy Appropriation bill will be taken up by the House Committee on Military Affairs on Tuesday. At that time also, it is expected that the resolution asking the Secretary of War to investigate the alleged hazing of Cadet Booz at West Point will be reported favorably, as Chairman Hull says the Secretary of War probably has instituted an inquiry on his own account, and there is no objection to expressing the wish of the House that the inquiry shall be made.

The House Committee on Naval Affairs yesterday complimented the Acting Chairman of the Committee, Representative Foss of Illinois, by unanimously selecting him to the Chairmanship of that committee, made vacant by the recent resignation of Mr. Boutelle of Maine. Under the rules of the House, the Speaker can appoint a Chairman only in case of death, and in case of resignation the next ranking member becomes Chairman unless the committee sees fit to select one. In this case, in the absence of Mr. Foss, the committee decided to give him the additional honor of a unanimous choice as Chairman.

The following telegram, addressed to the President of the Senate, was read to the Senate yesterday: "The Southern Industrial Convention now in session at New Orleans, passed the accompanying resolution and directed it be sent to you to be read to the Senate: 'Be it resolved, That the upbuilding of our American merchant marine is very important to the further development of Southern industry and, therefore, we recommend to our National Congress the early passage of a Ship Subsidy bill for all American vessels which shall be equitably based upon the tonnage actually carried, besides compensation for carrying the mails.'"

SMITH ESTATE NOT SOLD.

Heirs Say Its Value Is Greatly Enhanced by Supreme Court Decision.

CENTRE MORICHES, L. I., Dec. 7.—A report that the Smith estate, at Smith's Point, has been sold to H. O. Havemeyer was denied by E. T. Smith to-day. The reported price offered was $400,000. The Smith heirs claim that the value of their property has been greatly enhanced by the Supreme Court's decision confirming the title of the estate to nearly half of Great South Bay.

The estate comprises about 750 acres of upland in the southeastern portion of Brookhaven Township and half of East Bay, a branch of Great South Bay. The estate, under its patents, controls the entire right to fish in the waters of the westerly half of the bay and to shoot wild fowl there.

It was said to have been the intention of a new purchaser to establish a vast game preserve, in which the owner would hold the sole right to fish, to shoot, and to plant oysters over an area of about 5,000 acres of water on upland, something unique in the United States.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL PASSED IN THE HOUSE

Colored Imitation Butter Taxed Ten Cents Per Pound.

Minority of Committee Makes a Fight for Substitute for the Grout Measure, but Fails.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—After a hard fight by the opposition and the minority of the Committee on Agriculture, the Grout Oleomargarine bill was passed by the House to-day by a vote of 196 to 92. The bill makes all articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese transported into any State or Territory subject to the police powers of such State or Territory. It increases the tax on manufactured butter colored in imitation of butter from 2 to 10 cents per pound, and decreases the tax on manufactured butter uncolored from 2 cents to ¼ cent per pound.

Under the arrangement made yesterday the bill, which was postponed to allow the Army Reorganization bill to be disposed of, came up for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal. Mr. Henry (Rep., Conn.,) who is in charge of the measure, opened the debate in its support. He explained the features of the bill. The increase of the tax on colored imitation butter, he said, the majority of the Committee on Agriculture believed, was absolutely necessary to protect the dairy interests of the country.

The cause of the enormous amount of fraud and the illegal selling of oleomargarine, he asserted, was the great profits derived from the sale of the imitation because of its absolute counterfeit of butter. Thirty-two States already had absolutely forbidden the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter, he said, and this fact proved conclusively the policy of a very large majority of the people against the existence of imitation butter in counterfeit form.

Mr. Henry went exhaustively into the figures as to the cost of manufacturing the article to show that, including the payment of the present internal revenue tax of 2 cents, it was not more than 10 cents per pound. He declared the increase of the tax would prevent the large profits which were the incentive to violate the laws of the State and Government and defraud innocent purchasers, while the reduction of the tax on oleomargarine in its natural color would enable those who desired to consume to procure it at a lower cost than heretofore.

Mr. Wadsworth, (Rep., N. Y.,) Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who with six other members of the committee signed the minority report against the bill, explained the substitute which the minority would offer for it. He asserted with the greatest emphasis that the minority were just as earnest in their desire to prevent the fraud now practiced in the sale of imitation butter as the majority could be. The only difference was that the minority recognized the value of oleomargarine as a wholesome and nutritious food and entitled to a place as a food product.

In support of this statement he read the testimony of Prof. Chandler of Columbia College, Prof. Barker of the University of Pennsylvania, Prof. Morton of the Stevens Institute of Technology, Prof. Wiley of the Department of Agriculture, and that of other experts.

The purpose of the supporters of the Grout bill, Mr. Wadsworth charged, was to destroy the manufacture of oleomargarine, not to regulate its sale. The bill prepared by the minority, he added, would eliminate all possibility of fraud by compelling the sale of oleomargarine in original packages of one or two pounds, stamped with the word "Oleomargarine" and bearing the internal revenue tax stamp and imposing additional and heavy penalties for violations of the law. In regard to the coloring of oleomargarine, he declared that butter itself was colored. If coloring oleomargarine, therefore, was for the purpose of practicing a fraud, coloring butter actually was a fraud.

At this point Mr. Grout, (Rep., Vt.,) the author of the bill, assumed charge of the bill and took the floor in support of it. He declared that the purpose of the bill, in which every man, woman, and child was interested, was to suppress fraud in the sale of a food product by preventing the coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter. Over 104,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine had been manufactured and sold last year. That was about one-ninth of the total butter consumption of the United States.

"Do you not think that the enactment of the substitute would prevent fraud?" asked Mr. Burke, (Dem., Texas.)

"I do not," replied Mr. Grout. "The public would have no more protection than it has now."

Mr. Grout produced figures to show that oleomargarine cost less than 9 cents per pound to produce and was worked off on the public by the retailer at from 18 to 30 cents per pound. He gave a practical illustration of the manner in which oleomargarine is sold by having brought into the House a box full of packages of what looked like butter. Each was wrapped in brown wrapping paper. The packages were passed around, and after they had been examined Mr. Grout defied any one to tell whether they contained butter or oleomargarine. Then he turned up a corner of the wrapping paper, which had been apparently carelessly folded down, and displayed the printed word "Oleomargarine."

Mr. Lorimer (Rep., Ill.,) made a vigorous speech in opposition to the bill. He declared that the ten-cent tax would be an additional incentive to people desiring to commit fraud by coloring the oleomargarine.

Mr. Bailey (Rep., Kan.,) supported the substitute. He said that laboring men from all parts of the country had protested against the committee's bill.

Mr. Grosvenor (Rep., Ohio,) opposed the bill, which he said was designed to destroy one industry for the benefit of another. He said that the coloring matter which it was proposed to deny oleomargarine manufacturers the use of originally was used by them, and was now a staple of all cow butter manufacturers. He said that if the manufacture of oleomargarine was destroyed, as the bill would destroy it, the cost of butter would increase 25 per cent. to the laboring man.

Mr. Lamb (Dem., Va.,) and Mr. Davidson (Rep., Wis.,) supoprted the bill. Mr. Williams, (Dem., Mass.,) a member of the Agricultural Committee, who favored the substitute, devoted considerable time to the legal and Constitutional phases of the proposed legislation. He said he was willing to stamp out fraud, not only in the sale of oleomargarine, but of Vermont maple syrup and every other food product. The bill was then read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and many members secured recognition for the purpose of extending their remarks in The Record.

Mr. Bartlett (Dem., Ga.,) moved to strike out the proviso that nothing in the bill should be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in such form as would advise the consumer of its real character, free from coloration. The amendment was lost—48 to 117. An amendment was adopted providing that the act should go into effect July 1, 1901.

Mr. Bailey (Dem., Texas,) closed the debate against the bill. He contended that the pretense of the bill—that it was to prevent fraud—was itself a fraud. Mr. Wadsworth, on behalf of the minority of the committee, then offered the substitute prepared by the minority. The vote was against the substitute—113 to 178. The bill was then passed.

TO PAY $2,000 TO MEXICO.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—In relation to the lynching in La Salle County, Texas, Oct. 5, 1895, of Florentino Suaste, a Mexican citizen, the President, in a special message sent to the Senate to-day, recommends that the Mexican Government be paid $2,000 for the heirs of the victim.

The recommendation is made from motives of humanity, and "without reference to the question of the liability of the United States."

PORTO RICO'S REPRESENTATIVE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The Commissioner from Porto Rico, F. Degetau, recently elected by the people of the island to represent them in Congress and in Washington generally, is expected at the House of Representatives in a few days, and a large amount of mail is being held for him by the House officials. Representative Cooper of Wisconsin, Chairman of the Insular Committee, will make him at home in the quarters of that committee. His status on the floor is somewhat in doubt. He is designated in the law as a "Resident Commissioner," and is to receive a salary of $5,000 annually. On filing his credentials with the State Department he is to receive official recognition by all departments.

There is no provision for his admission to the floor of the House or for participation in debates similar to the provision for Delegates from Territories. It is expected, however, that he will advise and assist committees concerning Porto Rican legislation and steps may be taken to admit him to the floor.

A peculiar question has arisen as to whether Mr. Degetau becomes Commissioner at once or comes in like the newly elected members of Congress on March 4 next. The law providing for elections in Porto Rico contained no provision postponing the term to March 4, and he probably will be entitled to official recognition and salary as soon as he reports.

MR. GAGE URGED TO REMAIN.

Baltimore Bankers and Business Men Call on Him and Ask Him to Retain Treasury Portfolio.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—President Homer of the Baltimore Clearing House and thirty other prominent business men representing the Clearing House, the savings banks, and the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, called in a body at the Treasury Department to-day and urged Secretary Gage to accept the invitation of the President to remain at the head of the Treasury Department for another four years. Mr. Homer, speaking for the delegation, said in part:

Mr. Secretary: We do not come here to shower upon you words of fulsome praise, but we come to tell you briefly and sincerely, as plain men of affairs, how greatly the ability, the firmness, the skill, and the experience which have characterized your labors have awakened our admiration and esteem for you, and our confidence in you.

We have not a word of criticism to utter. On the contrary, the happy solution of each and every problem as it arose in your department, has stamped your work with the impress of ability, and it but required the publicity of a Congressional investigation to demonstrate to all of your fellow-citizens the purity of your motives, the impartiality of your actions, and your rigid performance, without fear or favor, of the statutes governing your office.

It is our ardent desire that the inclination of yourself, disregarding all personal sacrifice and inconvenience, and the intentions of your chief, the President, may so harmonize and so concur that for four years more your fellow-citizens will be vouchsafed the benefits and the advantages of your able and skillful administration of this most important branch of the Government of our great Nation.

We are firmly of the conviction that under your management that marvelous commercial and industrial development, born anew of our re-established confidence in our financial integrity, will continue its growth and its expansion, and will mark an epoch of prosperity such as has not heretofore illumined any page of our remarkable history.

I cannot at all question the perfect sincerity of your words. The support brought to them by the presence of these gentlemen of affairs who are in the habit of saying what they mean and meaning what they say removes from your remarks all suspicion of flattery. On the other hand, I cannot help but feel that you express words of over-appreciation of what I have done or of what I am able to do. Nevertheless, it has been my earnest purpose to conduct the affairs and the duties imposed upon me as an officer of the Government impartially, justly, and with the sole view of preserving the interests of the Government and the welfare of the people.

We ought all to feel a sense of great gratification that the story of the last four years has been one of great prosperity. The administration of the Government has no doubt had considerable influence upon this favorable movement. It has come to be in the course of our history that our Government is so related and tied into the financial interests of the country that imprudenre here, lack of caution there, too radical action here, or a lack of appreciation of what really pertains to the interests of the people, produce secondary effects upon the community which may be most prejudicial. It therefore seems doubly important that the head of the Administration of this Government and his assistants should be cautious, conservative, experienced, and prudent.

I cannot but give you most hearty thanks for your words. You all realize that the burdens of the position are many; that its rewards are few; unless, indeed, account is taken of the appreciation and approval of thoughtful men like you. That kind of reward is the highest recompense a man can receive for conscientious effort. That I have it from you, is, I assure you, one of the most satisfactory events in my connection with the department. I cannot tell you how much I value it, and how much I thank you for the trouble you have taken in expressing it in behalf of our people. If anything will encourage an officer to continue to endeavor to discharge his duties with even more zeal and vigor, it is just such an expression. The words of advice, the suggestions of friendly criticism, and kindly words of approval of whoever may be here will be of invaluable service.

If I remain here, as I hope to for some time to come, how long I know not, I will thank you gentlemen who have been so kind in expressing approval if you will at any and all times hang out cautionary signals or passwords of criticism if you see me going wrong, and extend words of approval if I am right. All together, the people of the United States are working out a great problem, and it can only be worked out successfully by public interest, public intelligence, and the watchful guardianship of those who are in a position to understand the questions before us. Their solution will be greatly enhanced by the interest of business men with patriotic sentiments who cherish the single desire to promote the welfare and honor of our country.

THE DETENTION OF MR. MAY.

If His Claims Are Correct the American Minister to Demand that He Be Allowed to Leave Guatemala.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—In answer to his instructions, United States Minister W. Godfrey Hunter at Guatemala City, has cabled to the State Department that the American engineer, May, who was prevented from leaving Guatemala is not in prison, but is prevented from leaving Guatemala under the law forbidding a debtor to leave the republic without paying his debts or securing his affairs in charge of some responsible representative. A judgment had been obtained against May.

The department responded to this message on the basis of the affidavits filed in the case, with a cablegram to Mr. Hunter reciting that May had undertaken to leave behind him an attorney of record. If this statement is substantially correct, then Mr. Hunter is directed to immediately demand that May be allowed to leave the country.

CABINET OPPOSES REVENUE CUT.

President's Advisers Agree that $40,000,000 Is Too Much.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The Cabinet to-day discussed the House bill revising the War Revenue act, which proposes a cut of about $40,000,000 in the revenues.

There is no difference of opinion among the members of the Administration on this subject, all thinking that the cut is too deep and agréeing that it would be unwise in the extreme to make the cut greater than $30,000,000.

Chairman Payne of the Ways and Means Committee reported the bill this afternoon. He said that he did not expect to call it up until after the Legislative and Judicial Appropriation bill has been disposed of. That delay will give further time to the Treasury and the country to determine whether the proposition to reduce the taxes $40,000,000 is safe or desirable.

When the President and the Secretary of the Treasury recommended that the taxes be cut down $30,000,000, they went quite as far as Mr. Gage's estimates of the revenue would permit him. The estimates for the present fiscal year, to close next June, promise a surplus of $80,000,000, and the reduction proposed, if it should take effect Jan. 1, which is not probable, would put seriously embarrass the Treasury this year.

But the estimate for 1902 shows a surplus of only $26,000,000. To cut down the revenues by $40,000,000 would obviously create a deficit, after allowing something for natural increase of the revenue by increase of imports or the consumption of domestic articles upon which internal revenue is collected.

MORE ACTIVITY IN LUZON.

Numerous Skirmishes Reported, with Heavy Loss to the Insurgents.

MANILA, Dec. 7.—More activity is shown in the operations in Northern and Southern Luzon. The reports from the former district come in more quickly and telegraphic interruptions are fewer.

Gen. Funston, with Troop A of the Fourth Cavalry, and a score of scouts, last Thursday encountered 100 insurgents posted on the opposite bank of the Nehico River. The Americans charged across the stream, and the enemy retreated, firing from cover. They left four dead on the field. A native who was captured reported that Fagin, a deserter from the Twenty-fourth Infantry, who has been active with the Filipinos, with a party of two cavalrymen, had been wounded.

Lieut. Morrow, with fifty men from the Forty-seventh Regiment, attacked and occupied Bulacan. While returning these troops encountered Col. Victoris, occupying an intrenched position, with 30 rifles and 300 bolo men. Lieut. Morrow's force charged and drove the enemy from their position, it is believed, with heavy loss. Preceding the fight the expedition had captured Major Flores and several of his followers.

An engagement is reported to have occurred near San Roque, in which, according to natives, fifty rebels were killed. Several minor encounters and captures are also reported. The American casualties have been very slight.

The Island of Bohul has recently been the scene of more activity on the part of the insurgents than formerly, and a company has been sent to reinforce the battalion stationed there.

The members of the Philippine Commission and several military officials will go to Dagupan to-morrow as guests of the railway management. Their families have also been invited. They will return Sunday.

NEW COINAGE FOR PHILIPPINES.

The Cabinet Discusses Plan to Mint 50-Cent Silver Dollars.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—At the Cabinet meeting to-day the question of coinage for the Philippine Islands was discussed, and as a result it is probable that the Secretary of War will request a hearing on the subject before one of the committees of Congress. Nearly all the business of the islands is transacted in Mexican dollars, and army commissaries and others supplied with United States money are at times greatly embarrassed in making purchases from the Filipinos by the fact that, knowing nothing of American money or its value, the natives often refuse to accept it.

The proposition which seems to have met with favor by the Administration is to purchase silver bullion at the present market price and coin it into distinctive dollars having a gold value of about 50 cents each. These dollars probably will contain a little less silver than the present standard dollars. The scheme has not yet been worked out in all of its details, but as there is at present a Government coinage mint in Manila, it is hoped that by the early action of Congress the new coins may be put into circulation before a great while, possibly before the Winter is over.

Experimental Farm Near Manila.

BERKELEY, Cal., Dec. 7.—Under the patronage of the United States Philippine Commission an experiment farm will be started about 200 miles from Manila, where the growth of seeds and plants from this country will be tested. Prof. Bernard Moses of the commission has written to the University of California regarding the proposed work, and on his suggestion the State institution will send from its experiment stations the required seeds and plants. Phelps Whitmarsh will conduct the work of the experiment farm.

London Paper Attacks the President.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—The Saturday Review, which devotes a page to a savage criticism of President McKinley's hopeful view of the future of the Philippines, as expressed in his message to Congress, dismisses the President's statement with the assertion that "it does not contain a shred or tittle of truth." The writer quotes from Frederick H. R. Sawyer, author of several works on the Philippines, and cites particularly his reference to the "hideous orgy of murder, plunder, and slave-raiding in Mindanao."

British Can't Find Filipino Junta.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—In response to Secretary Hay's representations through United States Ambassador Choate, the Foreign Office has replied that the authorities at Hongkong have been unable to discover a Filipino Junta there.

WOMAN PLEADS FOR THIEF.

Through the tender-heartedness of the woman he had robbed, and who pleaded for him in court, a man was saved from a long term in prison yesterday. Miss Pauline Keane of 111 East Thirty-fourth Street was coming out of the Tiffany apartment house, on Madison Avenue, Thursday night when Gustav Schmidt, who says he has no home, seized her purse, containing her gold watch and $20, and ran with it. Miss Keane pursued him, and a policeman caught him.

When the case was called in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday, Miss Keane appeared, but only to beg that the man be not prosecuted. She pleaded so earnestly that Magistrate Pool changed the complaint to disorderly conduct and held Schmidt in $1,000 bonds for his good behavior for six months.

MR. ODELL'S ATTITUDE ON CANAL IMPROVEMENT

To Send a Special Message to the Legislature.

ARGUMENTS OF BUSINESS MEN

New York's Commerce Menaced for Want of an Adequate Waterway—Diverted to Other Ports.

Governor-elect Odell intimated yesterday that he would send a special message to the Legislature early in the session on the question of canal improvement.

He gave this intimation in a speech which he made in reply to the remarks of prominent citizens, all of whom strongly urged prompt and material canal improvements.

The meeting was held in Parlor DR at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and was brought about by the Chamber of Commerce, the Canal Association of Greater New York, and other important commercial bodies in this city, Buffalo, and elsewhere.

The delegates who were present when the Governor-elect entered the room were introduced to him by Frank Brainard, ex-President of the New York Produce Exchange.

Henry B. Hebert, Chairman of the Canal Association of Greater New York, was the first speaker. He started by presenting the compliments of the delegation to Mr. Odell and congratulated him on his election.

"The Canal Association," he said, "was organized for the purpose of co-operating with other organizations throughout the State in a concerted movement of education respecting the importance of the canal to the commerce of the State."

Then Mr. Hebert reviewed the conditions of the commerce of the State and the City of New York, particularly during the period when almost completely under the control of the railroads. He contended that the New York railroads were unable to prevent the diversion of traffic to other seaboard cities. He cited the report of the Inter-State Commerce Commission in the case of the New York Produce Exchange against the trunk line roads for the abolishment of the differential rates by which the New York roads agree to charge 3 cents per 100 pounds more on traffic to this port than is charged by railroads terminating in Baltimore, Newport News, and Norfolk, and 2 cents per 100 pounds more than the railroads terminating at Philadelphia. In this report it is stated as the opinion of the commission that the amount of decline of the commerce of New York corresponds to the tonnage lost by the Erie Canal, and that if New York would regain that commerce it must look to that waterway.

A REGULATOR OF RATES.

With relation to the Erie Canal as a regulator of freight rates, he quoted the late George R. Blanchard to show the increase in railroad freight rates at the end of each canal season, and the decrease in those rates at the opening of canal navigation. He replied to the remarks of John K. Cowen, President of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, at the recent Chamber of Commerce dinner, and referred to the competition by the Canadian improved canals. He attributed the failure of the Brooklyn Wharf and Warehouse Company to the decline of traffic on the canal, and claimed that the loss of commerce had caused a decline in the value of real estate. He furnished many statistics to show the great diversion of commerce from New York to Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Newport News, New Orleans, and to Canadian ports.

Alfred Haines, President of the Merchants' Exchange of Buffalo, was the next speaker. He declared that his organization represented the vast commercial interests of the Niagara frontier. A few weeks ago reliable men were engaged to learn the real sentiment of the business men in anti-canal counties on the question of the rights of the people to a referendum bill on canal matters, and 90 per cent. of the many answers were favorable. Many of these came from Dunkirk, Elmira, Fredonia, Jamestown, Medina, Lyons, Mayville, Albion, Brockton, Brockville, and elsewhere. In all those places the people are behind the movement. He read telegrams showing that the Dunkirk Board of Trade had voted unanimously in favor of canal improvement.

Ex-Senator John Laughlin of Buffalo concurred in all that the preceding speakers had said, and maintained that the commerce of the State had declined very rapidly in the last two decades. The decline meant, he said, that unless something was done to stop it and regain some of the lost commerce New York would soon retire from first place in commercial supremacy. New York City, he declared, stands in a most dangerous position. What is the cause? Wherein does the remedy lie? That is a question for the Governor and the Legislature to determine. He would not be so presumptuous as to suggest and portion of the Governor's message, but he believed that an official statement from Mr. Odell at the proper time would arouse the people and awaken them to the great danger. The time was ripe for a preliminary investigation. The last Legislature had appropriated $200,000 for a survey, and until the report was laid before the Governor he was not prepared to suggest the proper remedy.

"A great danger confronts us as a State," continued the Senator. "We can see where our commerce has gone. The Dominion of Canada has secured much of it, and its Government is now considering the construction of two additional canals. Then, Newport News, Norfolk, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Boston are getting much of our commerce. The railroads alone cannot draw all the freight to New York. A dozen railroads could not do it. We must have a waterway. It is not a question of cost, but a question of how we can save what we have and regain some of that we have lost. Any Governor who saves to the State of New York her commercial supremacy will achieve more than De Witt Clinton, the projector of the canals."

THE WHEELINGMAN'S INTEREST.

William A. Rogers of Tonawanda, representing the iron and steel interests, said:

"Thousands of mechanics and laborers in our section alone are interested in the enlargement of the Erie Canal. Two concerns alone daily produce 1,000 tons of pig iron, and 90 per cent. of this goes East from Buffalo, and some of it is exported. Transportation is the great factor. The export trade ceases when the canal closes. We can ship iron to the seaboard by water for 85 cents per ton; the railroads charge $2.40 per ton. Mark that difference. We get lower rates in May, but they are increased in November. The South is less at the mercy of the railroads. Every consumer is interested in the production of iron and steel, because those metals enter into the construction of so many articles. The Hudson River blast furnaces run spasmodically because they are hampered by the need of a good waterway to bring them ore from Lake Superior. With cheap pig iron many other industries would be encouraged, notably shipbuilding. The Lackawanna Steel and Iron Company has recently removed from Scranton to Buffalo because it wants an outlet on Lake Erie. Trade in this State is seriously handicapped by railroad rates. Canal transit is a great necessity, and I urge you to use your powerful influence to give the people an opportunity to voice their opinion on the canal question."

Gustav H. Schwab of the North German Lloyd Line made a speech in which all manifested marked interest.

"The decline of the total foreign commerce of this city," he said, "is not only relative, but actual. In 1880 it was $852,497,000, in 1899 $835,839,000, a decrease for each year of $16,657,000. The tonnage cleared in 1882 was 7,263,000 tons, while in 1898 it was only 7,496,000, an increase of only 3 2-10 per cent. In the same time Boston has increased 43 per cent.; Philadelphia, 74 per cent.; Baltimore, 115 per cent.; Norfolk, 215 per cent. The tonnage entered in New York in 1880 was 7,811,000 tons, in 1898 it reached 7,771,000 tons, while in the same time that at Montreal, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and New Orleans had increased from 5,517,000 to 8,009,000. The exports of wheat, corn, and flour from New York have largely decreased since 1872."

"Do you attribute this decrease to railroad charges?" Mr. Odell asked.

"Very largely," replied Mr. Schwab. "But also to the lack of transportation facilities. Water transportation is always the cheaper. That has been demonstrated on the great lakes and produce can be shipped from Chicago and Duluth to Buffalo at 5 6-100 mills per ton per mile. The Erie Canal is not adequate as a connecting link. It is in about the same shape as it was forty years ago. The Erie should be modernized and improved to meet demands and to prevent the diversion of trade by railroad combinations. There is no demand for a ship canal capable of navigation by vessels drawing from 25 to 28 feet of water. That is a chimera. A lake vessel could not navigate the ocean, and vice versa. Neither could economically navigate a canal, while a canal vessel could not be utilized on either lake or ocean. The limit of speed in the Suez Canal is six miles per hour, on the Erie it would be about five, and it is idle to talk of vessels capable of going from fifteen to twenty miles an hour profitably navigating 400 miles of a canal at five miles an hour. The people have lulled themselves into a false state of security and seem oblivious of the great danger threatening them."

In closing, Mr. Schwab disposed of the story of the establishment of a new line of transatlantic steamers to run between Conneaut, Lake Erie, and European ports. The Lake Superior Iron Company bought four tramp steamships for use on the lakes, found them useless, and sent them back, never to return to Conneaut.

Anderson Fowler gave his personal experiences in transporting provisions for export and dwelt on the importance of the improvement of the canal system.

QUOTES CONKLING'S LETTER.

John D. Kernan first said he believed Mr. Stanchfield should have been elected because he made more speeches than Mr. Odell. He read a letter written by the late Roscoe Conkling strongly urging good canals. He did not agree with some of the ideas presented, and said that while it might be true that improved canals would bring back lost commerce, it was a question open to much discussion whether it was expedient to spend $100,000,000. Then, reading from a speech delivered by Senator Depew at Elmira in October, 1891, in which the Senator said that canals had compelled the lowest railroad rates in the world, Mr. Kernan declared that canals were a blessing and any expenditure was justified. The canals should be owned and controlled by the people. Freight rates by rail from New York to Buffalo were 6 cents less per 100 pounds than on the Pennsylvania Railroad for like distances, and these lower rates were caused by the Erie Canal.

"The Governor," concluded Mr. Kernan, "who gives the people better transit facilities by canal will live in the annals of this State as De Witt Clinton does."

G. Waldo Smith, President of the Grocers' Association, said that Gov. Clinton's foresight in building the canals had made New York the premier city in the world. A good canal was cheap at any price and the people wanted one.

Governor-elect Odell brought the meeting to a close by saying:

"I thank you very much for your courtesy in calling on me. I have been unable to give to this subject the attention it deserves. I have talked with the State Engineer, and he has advised me that his report will not be ready before Feb. 1.

"I am one of those who do not believe in making a recommendation until I know it can be carried out. I should not like to make any recommendation until I know the facts.

"I believe that the City of New York and the City of Buffalo are not more interested in this question than Newburg. Any benefit for the one ought to be a benefit for the other. I shall not be bound by the wishes of a single municipality alone. All municipalities and all the people must share in the benefits.

"I propose to treat this subject as I do all others, with an eye single to the greatest good to the greatest number of the people, and I may not move quite so quickly as Senator Laughlin has predicted, because before doing anything I want to be acquainted with all the details. When I make a recommendation I want something to stand on.

"I want to take up this great subject and treat it as it deserves. I have learned many things this afternoon, and I shall be glad to hear from any of you gentlemen at any time if you have further information for me on this question."

Front Light, No. 3.—A fixed white post-lantern light, 11 feet above the water, on a black, triangular, wooden structure of three piles, with a square, black daymark showing the figure "3" in white, standing at low-water mark on the southwesterly bank of the Ashley River, at the upper end of Cowhead Reach, on the southerly prolongation of the axis of the dredged cut through Cowhead Shoal. The approximate geographical position of the light, as taken from the above-named chart, will be: Latitude, north, 32 degrees 50 minutes 21 seconds; longitude, west, 80 degrees 1 minute 55 seconds.

Rear Light.—A fixed white post-lantern light, 26 feet above the water, on a white, triangular, wooden structure of three piles, with a square, white daymark without number, standing at low-water mark on the northerly bank of Toomer Creek, on the southerly prolongation of the axis of the dredged cut through Cowhead Shoal, and 1,845 feet S. by E. ¾ E. in rear of the preceding. The approximate geographical position of the light, as taken from the above-named chart, will be: Latitude, north, 32 degrees 50 minutes 4 seconds; longitude, west, 80 degrees 1 minute 47 seconds.

These two lights mark a range to guide through the dredged channel across Cowhead Shoal. Bearings are magnetic and given approximately; miles are nautical miles; heights are referred to mean high water, depths to mean low water.

FORT GEORGE CREEK RANGE BEACON LIGHTS.

Notice is hereby given that, on or about Dec. 30, 1900, changes, as follows, will be made in this range:

Sewing Machines

We sell but one kind. It's "the Wanamaker." And it's "the Wanamaker" because it's the best machine we know. We named it—were exceedingly cautious in bestowing that name. And though we believe this sewing machine to be the leader to-day—containing more valuable improvements than any other—yet we're selling it cheaply. Selling it without the aid of canvassers, that add much to the expense of handling machines; without costly instalment methods; without paying instructors to go about giving lessons—needed instructions are given at the store. In short, we're selling these splendid machines just as we do other merchandise. And that brings prices, that formerly soared almost beyond reach, down to reasonable figures, $18 to $35. The difference in price is due merely to added attachments or to finer cabinet work. Each machine, even at the lowest price, is perfect and complete.

LEGAL NOTES.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AND CONSPIRACY TO IMPRISON.—Lewella C. Oakes charged her ex-husband, Francis J. Oakes, and Adelaide J. Oakes, his present wife, and others, with having conspired to cause her committal to a sanitarium as an insane person, and sued them in the Supreme Court for damages. Mrs. Oakes asserted in her complaint that in pursuance of this conspiracy she was committed to an institution for the insane in November, 1891, and was kept there until the following February; and in March, 1893, was again committed and confined until Jan. 13, 1894, when she was taken to an asylum at Whitestone, and confined there until the 7th of the following June. She was then forcibly kept, she avers, in another institution for the insane at Darien, Conn. Having been required to reply to the defense interposed, of the statute of limitations, in that the cause of action had not accrued within two years before commencing her suit, Mrs. Oakes set up that the action was one which might be brought within six years. The Appellate Division, in this city, yesterday affirmed judgment granted dismissing the complaint on the pleadings. The opinion of the majority of the Court, by Justice Patterson, holds that the real foundation of the action was the damages done to the plaintiff; that the allegation of conspiracy did not form an essential part of the cause of action, and therefore the two years statute applied. Justice Ingraham gave a dissenting opinion, in which Presiding Justice Van Brunt concurred. Justice Ingraham said the question whether or not the statute of limitations applied, should only be disposed of upon the trial of the action. The parties, he said, were entitled by the Constitution to a trial of the action, either before a jury or at the Special Term.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANTS AS NUISANCES.—The injunction secured by Adam Riedeman, who owns the house, 534 Greenwich Street, in his suit against the Mount Morris Electric Light Company, restraining the company from committing and continuing certain alleged nuisances on its adjacent premises, at Vandam and Greenwich Streets, was yesterday reversed by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. Mr. Riedeman asserted that the company's machinery for generating electricity to be supplied to the general public for lighting and other purposes were so negligently constructed and operated as to discharge upon his premises "great quantities of soot, ashes, noisome gases, unpleasant odors, excessive heat, steam, and water condensed from steam," and produced in the operation of the machinery, "loud, disagreeable, and incessant noises, and great jar and vibration, which are transmitted into and through" his property, so as to disturb the rest and quiet of the inmates and injuriously affect their health. The judgment below, directing a perpetual injunction, provided for a postponement of the time when it should become operative, because of the serious inconvenience which would result to the public from its sudden enforcement. Justice Ingraham, giving the opinion of the appellate tribunal, holds that, in view of the fact that plaintiff had obtained a substantial sum from the elevated railroad company for damages sustained by the operation of its road, in loss of rents, which he now claimed was caused by the operation of the electric company's business, his proof that the latter's machinery caused substantial damages, was not satisfactory. Besides, it appeared that during the past ten years that neighborhood had changed from that of a residential character to one devoted to manufacturing and business purposes. "Existing modern conditions," the Court adds, "require the use of steam or other power in conducting the affairs and transacting the business of large cities. In the natural order of things, certain portions of the city are devoted to manufacturing purposes, where machinery is used. For courts of equity to enjoin the use of machinery in such portions of the city, on the complaint of a property owner, who has not seen fit to use his property as the other property in the locality or neighborhood is used, would result in banishing from the city the establishments which are essential to its welfare, the comfort of its inhabitants, and the transaction of its business. * * * The furnishing of electricity for lighting and power is recognized as essential for the public welfare and convenience, and if the defendant is enjoined by the Court, it does not appear that there is any other situation in the city to which its plant could be removed. If a property owner can obtain an injunction restraining persons using machinery upon property in a locality like that described in this action, all business requiring the use of such machinery would be banished from the City of New York, the production of electricity prevented, and the streets of the city left unlighted." Under the circumstances, the Court decides that the injunction should be refused and the plaintiff be left to the remedy at law. In the similar suit brought by John McNoulty, as lessee of 525 Greenwich Street, the judgment granted by the Special Term for $1,100 damages is reversed. In that case it appeared that long before McNoulty acquired any interest in the property the electric plant had been operated, and that before the beginning of the action the plaintiff's lease had expired.

LABOR UNION STRIKES AND INJUNCTIONS.—The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in this city yesterday upheld the decision of the Special Term setting aside a preliminary injunction secured by Edward R. Kerbs and others in their suit to restrain Nathan Rosenstein, President of Local Union No. 144 of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, and others from the commission of certain acts claimed to be unlawful and injurious to their business as manufacturers and sellers of cigars. The injunction restrained the defendants, both in their individual and representative capacities, from interfering with the plaintiffs or their employes, and from loitering around or picketing the factory of the plaintiffs, on Second Avenue. Justice Patterson, giving the opinion of the Court, said every serious allegation of the complaint and the affidavits upon which the injunction was granted had been in their most essential features successfully refuted by the affidavits on the other side, and that it was shown that neither the Cigar Makers' International Union of America nor Local Union No. 144 had anything whatever to do with originating the strike among the plaintiff's employes. Of the 2,000 who quit work, 1,600 were non-union members, and only 400 of them belonged to the association. The defendants claimed that the few girls who were engaged at stated hours in the morning and in the afternoon upon the street, who spoke to employes on entering or leaving the factory, were merely stating the cause of the strikers to those with whom they entered into conversation. The Court was not called upon, Justice Patterson said, in such a conflict as appeared in the case as to what was really done by the so-called pickets or patrol, to hold any species of picketing or patrolling by the strikers as unlawful. "If the facts as alleged by the plaintiffs were established by a preponderance of proof," the Court says, "we should have no difficulty in reinstating some of the provisions of the injunction; but upon these affidavits a case is not made out for such relief." Justice McLaughlin, in a dissenting opinion, said it was established by the moving papers, among other things, that the defendants had ordered a strike of the workmen in the factory, and for the purpose of making such strike effective it placed pickets in front of his place; that these pickets loitered and walked continuously in front of the building; that they jostled "against employes coming in and going out; sneering and hooting and laughing at employes, calling them by vile names, and urging them to leave" plaintiff's employment; and that at least on one occasion the pickets forcibly seized a person who was seeking employment, and endeavored to pull such person from the entrance of the building; and on being prevented made certain threats; that a picket made insulting remarks to a girl going out of the factory, and another picket stopped a girl and told her she should not go into the building, and if she continued to work there she would be "licked." "Can it be," Justice McLaughlin adds, "that a court of equity will refuse to exercise its equitable powers to restrain unlawful acts of these defendants? If so, I am at a loss to understand upon what principle it can be done. It may be that 'picketing,' per se, is not an unlawful act, but that is not the question here presented. Here something more was done than picketing. Intimidation, coercion, and force were used, and such acts no court so far as I am aware, has yet refused to restrain. It is true that the pickets were women, but this does not detract from the illegality of the act, especially when the acts of such women were directed against other women and girls in the employ of the plaintiffs." Justice McLaughlin is of the opinion, however, that the injunction was too broad, and should have been modified so as to prevent the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' business, or picketing their factory in such a manner as to express or employ threats, intimidation, coercion, or force.

RIGHTS OF WATER COMPANIES.—The Appellate Division yesterday sustained an order of the Special Term of the Supreme Court, granting a peremptory writ of mandamus to John P. O'Brien and another, receivers of the New York and Westchester Water Company, requiring Commissioner Keating of the Department of Highways of the City of New York to permit them to open a street in Bronx Borough for the purpose of disconnecting a service pipe to the residence of Mrs. A. B. Conklin, now Mrs. Henderson. The Court, by Justice Patterson, holds that where, as in this case, the only objection to granting the permit, was the existence of a controversy between the water company and the occupant of the premises concerning certain private rights, it was not within the discretion of a public officer to refuse to perform that which, under the circumstances of this case, was merely a ministerial act, there being no public interest involved. Justice Hatch gave an elaborate dissenting opinion, holding that the petitioners had not shown a clear legal right to be aided by the writ. The controversy was as to whether the petitioner might make use of the writ for an illegal purpose, and whether the Commissioner might be coerced into becoming a party to its accomplishment, and not over the fact as to whether the former tenant was or was not indebted to the company.

BAY WINDOW ENCROACHMENTS.—Charlotte Y. Ackerman, who was unsuccessful on the trial of her suit to obtain a judgment against Clarence F. True, declaring six dwelling houses erected by him on the east side of Riverside Drive, between Eighty-second and Eighty-third Streets, to be unlawful obstructions to the public highway and an unlawful interference with her easements of light, air, and access, yesterday secured from the Appellate Division a reversal of the judgment below. Mrs. Ackerman, who owns two vacant lots at Riverside Drive and Eighty-second Street, complains of a projection on the front of each of Mr. True's houses, extending about four feet beyond the building line into the street. The injunction asked for was denied by the trial court, although it was decided that the projections were illegal and constituted a public nuisance, and $2,500 damages was awarded for injury to her property. The Court also conferred authority, upon a contingency, to apply for further damages. Justice Hatch, giving the unanimous decision of the Appellate Division, holds that the only relief which the Court had authority to award was a mandatory injunction, together with the award of damages.

NEW YORK AND HARLEM RAILROAD ASSESSMENT.—The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday handed down a decision reversing the order of the lower court in which the Tax Commissioners were directed to strike from the assessment rolls an assessment of $7,660,000 on the real estate of the New York and Harlem Railroad, in Manhattan. The railroad company claimed that the real estate should not be so assessed, because of the assessment already made under the franchise tax law. Justice Rumsey writes the opinion of the court. He says that the law of 1899 provides that the property specified as subject to the special franchise tax should be taxable only upon the assessment made by the State Board of Tax Commissioners. In making the claim they do, the relators necessarily assume that the Act of 1899 is constitutional, and that it not only prescribes the action of the State Board, but forbids action with respect to the same property by the City Board. For the purposes of this decision the court holds that the contention is correct. The Appellate Division holds further that the court below should not have granted a mandamus, but should have required the relators to resort to the remedy which the law gives them by a writ of certiorari. The order granted by the court is therefore reversed, and the motion is denied. In his opinion Justice Rumsey says: "The principle that a writ of mandamus will be granted where the relator has a plain, adequate, and sufficient remedy at law to correct the grievance of which he complains, is a wholesome one, and one which is rarely if ever to be departed from. There is a reason why the writ of certiorari should be resorted to rather than mandamus to correct an assessment. The court has much greater power in disposing of one of these cases which comes up by certiorari and is not limited solely to striking out the assessments, but may correct it if the circumstances are such as to warrant anything of the kind." Justice McLaughlin writes a dissenting opinion. He says it is conceded that this assessment made by the local board is contrary to the law, and he sees no reason why a litigant should be driven out of one door in order to enter the same room by another. There are exceptions, he says, to the general rule, that one who applies for a writ of mandamus must be without other legal remedy, and he thinks this case one of the exceptions.

SUBMARINE BOATS' POWER.

Mr. Holland Predicts Dire Disaster for England If France Employs a Hostile "Plunger" Fleet.

John P. Holland, the inventor of the Holland submarine boat, delivered a lecture last night on submarine torpedo boats to the students of Manhattan College. Before Mr. Holland finished his lecture he made the statement that France in case of war with Great Britain, even with a fleet of very imperfect submarine boats, could be able to enter and take possession of every harbor along the British Coast, could blow half the British fleet out of water, keeping its own fleet outside, and causing havoc and destruction along the coast.

Mr. Holland also explained the failure of the submarine torpedo boat Plunger, and outlined the plan which he made during the Spanish war to take his "Holland" into the harbor of Havana and counter-mine it, and then shell the fortifications at close range with gun cotton.

The lecture was the first of a number which noted experts will deliver at the college preparatory to a course of naval architecture, which will soon be installed at that institution. The lecture was illustrated with stereopticon views.

Mr. Holland traced the history of the submarine boat from 200 years ago, when Bushnell of Connecticut tried to blow up her Majesty's ship Eagle, lying off Governors Island, to the present day. He illustrated the attempts and steps which led up to the modern American invention, and pointed out how by degrees failures led to improvements and final success.

"From the very outset," the lecturer said, "submarine boats suffered under the reputation that they were dangerous and that men to man the craft could not be found. I want to impress on you that submarine boats are really as safe to manage as any other kind of boat."

Mr. Holland then made the statement regarding France and England. The Plunger, he said, he had ordered to remain uncompleted because a "lot of young fellows in the navy who thought they knew things about submarine boats imposed conditions which, if fulfilled, would result in dire failure." He then said that during the Spanish war he had planned to tow into Havana Harbor behind the Holland a two-mile cable, to which at intervals torpedoes would be attached. The plan was to explode these, and thus "for once clean the harbor."

EMMA GOLDMAN RETURNS.

Visits the Anarchist Groups and Expresses Her Indignation Against the Paris Police.

The Anarchist groups of this city were excited yesterday over the news that Emma Goldman, who has been conferring with the groups in England and France, has returned to this country. She made a hurried tour of the various Anarchist headquarters in this city during the day, and was in a state of great indignation over the way the Reds were treated by the Parisian police.

She says that the Anarchists from various countries had arranged to hold an international Anarchist congress in Paris, but just as it was about to convene the police officials swooped down, broke up the meeting, and drove the leaders out of the city. It was an outrage, she declared, her eyes snapping with anger, and showed that even the Socialist Government of Paris was under the domination of the plutocrats. In spite of the Parisian authorities, however, she said, a secret congress was held, and arrangements made for a propaganda.

Emma Goldman was angry also at the apathy of the people in England regarding the spread of propaganda. They acted as if a social revolution was never heard of. She has now started on a lecturing tour through various cities in order to spread propaganda, and will wind up in this city. Her friends say that, having already had an experience in prison here, she will fight shy of any conflict with the law.

"But she will spread propaganda," said one of them, "and watch the police. Anarchy will never die."

"Hoch die Anarchie!" said another, raising a foaming stein of beer to his mouth.

Suicide of a Haverhill Man.

After spending but two weeks in New York, Louis Rosengardt of Haverhill, Mass., who was here on a visit to the family of his son-in-law, Morris Rosengardt, a Mercer Street clothier, committed suicide yesterday morning. When the family cook went into the kitchen at the Rosengardt residence, 615 Lexington Avenue, early in the morning, she found the room full of gas and the elder Rosengardt sitting in a chair, dead. He had been despondent for several days.

HOMELESS WOMAN FOUND DEAD

Kate Bowen, sister of William P. Bowen, Foreman of Engine Company No. 59, at One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street and Seventh Avenue, was found dead yesterday morning in a small room behind the restaurant of Ernest Dausand at 616 Hudson Street. The room was full of gas that had escaped from a radiator. After the representative of the Coroner had examined the body he reported that Miss Bowen's death had been accidental. When she went to the restaurant night before last she did not give any name, and at first there was some difficulty in getting an identification, but shortly after noon Foreman Bowen went to the Morgue and said that she was his sister.

The restaurant keeper's wife says that Miss Bowen went there several days ago and asked for lodging, which was refused her on the ground that there was not room in the house for any one but the family. On Thursday night she returned, and, after telling Mrs. Dausand that she had once been here in a boarding house kept by the latter on Nineteenth Street, persuaded her to let her pass the night in the kitchen behind the restaurant. She said that she had no friends and was out of employment, and that she had just quarreled with her sister "on Fifteenth Street." Then she sang some sad songs to the assembled family of the restaurateur and went to sleep on a lounge that had been brought down stairs for her. Mrs. Dausand found her dead the next morning.

William P. Bowen declined yesterday to discuss his sister's death. It was learned elsewhere that she was once a saleslgirl in a Sixth Avenue department store, and that until four years ago she lived with her brother. Where she has been since then could not be discovered. She was twenty-nine years old.

The Rainbow May Go to Guam.

It was said at the Brooklyn Navy Yard yesterday that the distilling ship Rainbow, which has been lying there for a long time, would probably be sent to Guam to take the place of the wrecked cruiser Yosemite on that station. The Rainbow will need some repairs and alterations if she is to be sent to Guam.

EXPLOSION IN A BASEMENT.

Two Steamfitters Are Probably Fatally Burned.

The contact of the flame from a plumber's candle with the fumes from benzine caused an explosion yesterday in the basement of a newly completed apartment house at One Hundred and Fifteenth Street and St. Nicholas Avenue. The two steamfitters, John and Edward Stevenson of 389 Willis Avenue, who were at work in the basement at the time, were seriously burned.

The men had lighted a candle for examining a joint, when there came an explosion that was heard for several blocks. A moment later the two brothers ran into the street, their clothing ablaze. Coats and blankets were thrown about them, but before the fire could be extinguished both men had fallen to the street exhausted.

A priest living near-by administered the last rites of the Church as the men were being placed in an ambulance. They were taken to the J. Hood Wright Hospital, where it is said both will probably die. Very little damage was done to the building.

SENTENCED FOR ARSON.

Adolph and Florence Hoffman Get Five Years Each in Prison.

Adolph and Florence Hoffman of 680 East One Hundred and Forty-sixth Street, who pleaded guilty to attempting to burn the flathouses at the above number in November, were yesterday sentenced to five years' imprisonment each by Recorder Goff. The maximum punishment for this crime is forty years in prison. Hoffman was an extra driver in the Post Office mail service. Not making enough money to live on, he was on Nov. 2 last dispossessed. That same day he obtained employment as janitor of a flathouse, and while packing up to move found an insurance policy for $600 on the household furniture. With Hoffman and his wife lived his cousin, Mary Hoffmeyer, sixteen years old, and the girl was induced to set fire to a bed saturated with kerosene.

In the house were five families of about twenty persons. Several were injured in making their escapes. The fire was extinguished after doing damage to the extent of $10.

Lieut. Hobson's Condition.

It was said at the Presbyterian Hospital last night that Lieut. Hobson's condition was as good as could be expected. There had been no change during the day.

EGGS, LOVE, AND LUCRE.

A Combination Which Caused Gus Steinhart's Conviction.

Eggs, love, and lucre figured prominently in the romantic recital of the past history of "Gus" Hart, alias Steinhart, of Missouri and New York, convicted yesterday in General Sessions of appropriating to his own use $1,161.36 of his prospective father-in-law's money. This sum represented the proceeds of a sale of 382 cases of fresh eggs consigned to Hart for disposal in the New York market by A. Loewenstein of Chillicothe, Mo. Hart says he was engaged to marry Loewenstein's daughter.

According to the story of the misappropriation, as told in the complaint of Milton W. Brown, Mr. Loewenstein's representative, Hart drifted into Chillicothe the early part of the year, and, representing himself to be a commission merchant, made the acquaintance of Loewenstein and his daughter. Hart admitted that he was "down on his luck," and persuaded Mr. Loewenstein to allow him to dispose of a carload of eggs in New York. The eggs were shipped, disposed of, and the proceeds spent, Hart told Detective Lawson, in playing the races.

Hart wrote his fiancée that he was going to Pretoria to fight with the Boers, and then went to live at a Broadway hotel. Loewenstein's detectives found him out, and his arrest followed. He will be sentenced Monday.

ADVICE BY KANG-YU-WEI

Famous Reformer Addresses Letter to Envoys at Peking.

WANTS KWANG-SU RESTORED

Says He Is a Friend of Foreigners—Declares Southern Viceroys Are Not to be Trusted.

PEKING, Dec. 6.—Mr. Conger, the United States Minister, and the other foreign envoys received to-day a letter signed by Kang-Yu-Wei, the well-known Cantonese reformer, who was formerly an adviser of Emperor Kwang-Su, and who has always been favorable to foreigners.

Kang says that great calamities have befallen China through the Empress Dowager, and also in consequence of her advisers, Prince Tuan, Prince Ching, Yung-Lu, Yang-Yi, Chao-Shu-Chiao, Muang-Ru, Moyn-Kuen, and Hrlong. He says he is thankful that the foreigners held out in the legation buildings in Peking, and declares that all the Chinese who understand the law of nations regret the murder of Baron von Ketteler.

He then says he desires to make suggestions which "will ensure the just punishment of the real culprits, satisfaction to the different countries, and a permanent settlement of the international relations of China." He urges:

First—That the Empress Dowager and her advisers should not be allowed to negotiate peace.

Second—That the Emperor, who is a friend of foreigners, should be restored.

Third—That all reactionary officials should be arrested and that a careful watch should be kept over the so-called friendly Viceroys in the south.

Unless Yung-Lu, Prince Tuan, and the others are severely dealt with, Kang contends, they will continue to say that the foreigners are powerless.

"The foreigners should not rely upon the Viceroys," continues the reformer. "They send men, money and armaments to the Empress, and are her obedient servants. Should the Emperor be restored, the empire would rejoice. The Emperor's party consists of the most enlightened men, who are friendly to foreigners, and desire to incorporate Western civilization and culture in an ancient country."

Kang-Yu-Wei points out that he was appointed for the task by a secret edict of the Emperor in 1898, when he made his appeal on behalf of the Emperor to the foreign powers—"an appeal which, had they listened to it, would probably have prevented what has happened."

DE WET'S TROOPS EXHAUSTED.

ALIWAL NORTH, Cape Colony, Dec. 7.—After the fight at Sterk Spruit, Gen. De Wet doubled south during the night, crossed the Caledon River, marched to Odendal Drift, where he found the stream impassable, turned east, and marched along the north bank of the Orange River until within fifteen miles of Aliwal North, and then turned northeast in the direction of Rouxville.

Gen. Knox dogged his steps the whole day. De Wet's forces were thoroughly exhausted. Three hundred of their dead and dying horses were counted between the Smithfield Road and the Orange River.

FRENCH VOTE OF CONFIDENCE.

Deputies Reject Proposed Slavery Inquiry—Senate Passes Naval Bill.

PARIS, Dec. 7.—The Chamber of Deputies to-day rejected a motion providing for a Parliamentary inquiry into slavery and cruelty in the French colonies.

The Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, denounced the Opposition's tactics of constantly bringing various charges against administrative officials. He said a commission of inquiry would be tantamount to putting the entire colonial administration on the stand, and, he added, the Government would not retain power for a moment at such a price. He regarded the matter as one of confidence.

The motion was then defeated by a vote of 409 to 116.

The Senate adopted the Naval bill after a short discussion.

Senator Combes, Progressive Republican, representing the Charente-Inferieure, urged the building of twenty additional cruisers to prey upon Great Britain's commerce in case of war. The Minister of Marine, M. de Lanessan, replied that the number of cruisers projected in the present bill would suffice for France's needs.

Gen. Mercier then rose and alluded to his speech of Dec. 4, when he urged training the army in embarkation and disembarkation drills, so as to be ready for an invasion of England. He said he was unable to understand the sensation his remarks had produced. He did not desire war with Great Britain, but he thought it the duty of the Government to provide for such an eventuality. He repudiated any intention to appear aggressive toward Great Britain.

SHAREHOLDERS HISS DIRECTORS.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—A meeting of persons interested in Stratton's Independence Mine to-day attracted a large attendance of shareholders, who passed a vote of no confidence in the Board of Directors, after one of the stormiest city meetings on record. The whole meeting was disorderly. The Directors were hissed and hooted, and the words "scandalous" and "disgraceful" and accusations of fraud were hurled broadcast.

The Earl of Chesterfield, who presided, read a cablegram from John Hays Hammond, the American engineer, asking him to announce to the meeting that Mr. Hammond's connection with the mine dated from after the shortage of ore reserves was discovered. His lordship proceeded to say that a cabic message received from the State Geologist (Rickards) of Colorado, dated Oct. 20, conveyed the first intimation of serious misrepresentation on the part of the old management in regard to the value of ores. This was not published because it was vague and incomplete, but had the Directors had any conception of the foreshadowed discrepancy of $12,000,000, as shown in the subsequent report of Mr. Hammond, dated Nov. 24, they would certainly have made Mr. Rickards's statement public.

Mr. Rickards made a personal explanation at the meeting, and a long and animated discussion, punctuated with wild disorder and much execration, followed. Chaos reigned, amidst which the great mass of shareholders left. Lord Chesterfield then declared the report carried, though the meeting had previously voted to postpone its consideration for two months.

DISPUTE OVER A DEAD BODY.

Rival Undertakers Cause Two Postponements of a Funeral.

Louis Stichof died last Monday at his home, 415 Seventh Avenue, and although on two separate occasions friends and relatives have gathered at his funeral, his body still lias at his home while rival undertakers are engaged in a legal squabble as to who shall dispose of it.

According to the story told by Mrs. Stichof yesterday in the Jefferson Market Police Court, one of the members of the undertaking firm of Scully & Huhna of 50 Sixth Avenue came to her shortly after her husband's death and got her to sign a paper which authorized the firm to ice the body, but which she thought was some formal paper of the Coroner. This firm then went ahead and made all preparations for the funeral, which had been set for Thursday last, and for the incineration of the body at Fresh Pond.

On the day appointed they went to the house, only to find that Mrs. Stichof had installed another undertaker, who refused to allow the original firm to enter the premises. Scully & Huhna thereupon refused to surrender the burial certificate, and the funeral was of necessity postponed. The large number of friends and relatives who had gathered at the house to attend the services became indignant and freely threatened the obdurate undertakers, but to no purpose. Mrs. Stichof announced that the funeral would surely take place yesterday afternoon, and in the meantime procured summonsea for the appearance of Scully and Huhna in the Jefferson Market Police Court.

When they were arraigned yesterday, Magistrate Meade said he had no jurisdiction in the matter, saying that it was a case for civil action. The firm still refused to give up the permit, and a large gathering of mourners at the Stichof home were again disappointed.

Scully & Huhna give as a reason for their obduracy that they have gone to considerable expense in the matter of preparing for the funeral, and they fear they may not be reimbursed in case the other undertaker officiates. The funeral has been set down for to-morrow.

MATTEO BOVE DISCHARGED.

Had Been Arrested for an Alleged Murder in Italy.

Matteo Bove, who, it was claimed, was wanted for the alleged murder of Gaetano Casa in Salerno, Italy, was yesterday discharged from custody by Magistrate Brenner, in Brooklyn. Bove's case was a peculiar one, no one apparently being willing to assume the responsibility of keeping him in custody. Bove reached this country a few days ago on the steamship Patricia. A brother of the murdered man learned where Bove was staying in Brooklyn, and got Detective Antonio Vachris to arrest him.

Magistrate Brenner referred the case to Assistant United States District Attorney Brush, and the latter sent the detective to Commissioner Fitchle of the Bureau of Immigration. Mr. Fitchie said that he had no power to deport Bove, as the latter had passed beyond the jurisdiction of his department. Detective Vachris then appealed to the Italian Consul.

The Consul said that there had been no demand on the part of his Government for Bove. The Treasury Department at Washington was next communicated with, but the officials there sent back word that if the Italian authorities would not act in the matter the department could do nothing. Discouraged, Detective Vachris yesterday took Bove before Magistrate Brenner. The Magistrate said there was nothing that he could do but discharge Bove.

Berlin Murderer Beheaded.

The murder was an atrocious one, and was committed in the centre of Berlin. The murderer was ultimately traced to Brazil, through a pet dog, and was arrested at Rio Janeiro a year ago. Capital punishment is so unusual here that the execution of Coenczi attracted much attention.

NEWS OF NEW JERSEY

LANDIS WILL CONTEST.

Aunt Takes the Stand and Testifies Against Disinherited Sons.

VINELAND, N. J., Dec. 7.—The taking of testimony in the contest of the will of Founder Landis, who founded this place, Sea Isle City, and numerous other places in South Jersey, was completed this evening. The counael will sum up on Monday, and the case will rest with the Court by adjournment on Monday evening.

The most important testimony of the day was that given by Miss Matilda T. Landis, sister of the testator and chief beneficiary of the will. Her testimony was intended to blacken the character of the contestants. She declared among other things that Montevert had threatened to kill his father. She accused the brothers of treating the father in a manner unlike what would be expected of sons. She denied ever having circulated a story to the effect that Montevert was not Mr. Landis's son. The latter testimony was flatly contradicted by Mrs. O. S. Graves, widow of a former Mayor of Vineland, who testified that Miss Landis had told her Montevert was not a legitimate child.

WAGON HIT BY A TRAIN.

Man Terribly Injured at Red Bank, but Wife and a Boy Escape.

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., Dec. 7.—While P. Wolcott, his wife, and J. Wright, a boy of twelve years, were driving in a grocery wagon across the railroad track south of the New York and Long Branch Railroad station at this place this evening they were run down by a Pennsylvania train.

The horse was instantly killed and the wagon smashed into kindling wood. The wheels of the locomotive caught Mr. Wolcott, cutting off a leg and an arm. His wife and the boy were hurled beside the tracks and escaped with a few bruises.

Dr. Fields, who is the attending physician at the Monmouth Memorial Hospital at Long Branch, and who happened to be on the train, which was stopped at once, had Mr. Wolcott conveyed to the Long Branch Hospital, and saya there is poor hope of the patient's recovery.

The party were on their way to Eatontown, where they live. Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott were married only two months ago.

UPSHOT OF A CLUB SMOKER.

Westfield W. C. T. U. Censure a Vaudeville Entertainment.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 7.—Members of the Westfield Club, the fashionable society organization of the town, are greatly stirred up over a resolution passed by the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the meeting yesterday afternoon as an echo of the vaudeville entertainment given at the clubhouse on election night. The affair was in the nature of a smoker, and the programme was made up of sprightly features, a couple of vaudeville actresses doing a lively turn. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union resolution of censure is as follows:

We regard with apprehension and anxiety the introduction into the club smokers, of indecent features such as pertain to low variety theatres. Whatever tends to degrade womanhood tends to the degradation of manhood. That the necessity for protection exists is a cause of the deepest humiliation, but the safeguarding of our best interests requires that the moral sense of the people shall be aroused so that public sentiment shall prevent further repetition of such offenae against the homes of our community.

Burglar Gets a Hot Reception.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 7.—At 3 o'clock this morning, Grocer W. T. He left a coat and cap and a trail of blood spots behind him.

TENEMENT WORK TO BE GENERAL

Volunteers of America Will Make Their Movement a National One.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Dec. 7.—Gen. Ballington Booth and his wife, the leaders of the Volunteers of America, have decided to make the tenement work of the Volunteers national at once, instead of waiting for it to develop in New York. This determination was reached to-day in response to calls from other cities, reciting that there was immediate need for the work in them as well as in New York.

Gen. Booth made the statement to-night that it was safe to say one-tenth of the tenement population of New York had nothing save a few crusts between them and graves in the paupers' burying ground.

The active field work will begin within a day or so in Chicago, and within a few days will be extended to the other large cities of the country. An appeal has been issued asking for support. The Volunteers will ask the co-operation of all whose professions or duties take them into positions where they can find deserving poor suffering.

STAMPEDED SALVATION ARMY.

Police After Von Ten Brock, Who Fired Shots During Service.

Recorder Stanton of Hoboken yesterday issued a warrant for the arrest of Alfred Von Ten Brock, a steamship fireman living at 145 East Seventy-seventh Street, Manhattan. It is alleged that the accused entered the Salvation Army Barracks in Hoboken during the service on Thursday night and deliberately fired three shots from a revolver.

"Pray fast and devotedly," he shouted, "for your time has come. A messenger from this toy I hold will introduce you to your Maker."

Then he fired the shots, and a stampede followed.

Von Ten Brock mingled with the crowd and escaped. Should he appear in Hoboken again he will be arrested.

DR. WHITE SEEKS DIVORCE.

His Wife Denies West Hoboken Physician's Charges.

Dr. Wallace White, Town Physician of West Hoboken, has brought suit against his wife for divorce on statutory grounds, naming Edward Zink, nineteen years old, as co-respondent. He was formerly a clerk in Adolph Welsmann's drug store. Dr. White's bill is accompanied by affidavits made by Rachel King, a former servant in Dr. White's household, and the doctor's coachman, Robert P. Gilman. Mrs. White's counsel, said her answer would be a general denial, in which Zink would join.

Dr. and Mrs. White have not lived happily for two years, and on several occasions he has left the town on prolonged excursions. In October last he took his four-year-old son to New York to buy him a pony. They were absent about three weeks. Dr. White explained that he was obliged to go to Utica, N. Y., to find a pony that suited him.

TRIED WHOLESALE MURDER.

SEATTLE, Washington, Dec. 7.—William Seaton, aged twenty-two years, formerly of Decatur, Ill., to-day attempted to exterminate an entire family, his relatives, at South Park, nine miles from Seattle. With an axe he smashed in the heads of four persons, leaving them for dead; then shot one man in the back and attempted to kill a Deputy Sheriff. Before being captured Seaton was shot twice, but not fatally, by Deputy Sheriff Kelley.

The only one killed outright was Seaton's uncle, Daniel Richards. Seaton broke in the head of his sister, Mrs. Roy Clark, but her recovery is hoped for. The two other victims were Myrtle and Hazel Hapgood, children of a former husband of Mrs. Clark. The skulls of the little ones were crushed, and then the bodies were thrown into a manger in the barn. It was supposed they were dead, but a late report from the County Hospital says that the skull of one of the children had been raised, and there is hope of recovery. The other child will undoubtedly die.

A man named Kennedy, who got in Seaton's way after the tragedy, was shot in the back, but not seriously injured. Seaton fired three times at Kelley before the latter brought him down with two shots, which took effect in the head and arm.

Under the belief that all his intended victims were actually dead, Seaton told the following story: "I was disgusted with the actions of my sister, and, after I had struck her in the head with an axe, I came to the conclusion that I might as well make a clean sweep. I smashed the skulls of the children and then threw their bodies into the manger. Returning to the house, I saw my uncle asleep on a sofa. I chopped his head almost off."

While telling his story Seaton gave no evidence of insanity. In fact, he made the specific statement that he was not insane.

HARLEM REPUBLICAN CLUB.

Members of the Harlem Republican Club with their friends to the number of about 1,200, gathered in the new home of the organization, 23 West One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street, last evening at a reception given in honor of Governor-elect Benjamin B. Odell and other leaders of the winning State ticket at the last election.

It was the date upon which it was decided some time ago that the new clubhouse should be turned over to their fellow-members by the Building Committee, which had charge of improvements, and the idea of the reception was settled upon as the most appropriate way of celebrating the occasion. Absence of formality marked the proceedings, and there were no set speeches.

The guests of honor, besides the Governor-elect, were Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, State Treasurer John P. Beckel, and State Engineer and Surveyor Edward A. Bond. They were met at the door by the Reception Committee, which consisted of William Sherer, a Presidential Elector, Chairman; James Y. Watkins, President of the club; Silas C. Croft, and Charles E. Merritt.

They were led to the parlor through a hall draped with American flags, and there took positions across the front end of the room, where all present filed before them and offered congratulations. This done they mingled with the company, among whom they had found many intimate friends. An excellent Hungarian orchestra furnished the music and a collation was served in the rooms on the second floor.

The clubhouse is a four-story brownstone structure built as a residence by George W. De Revolse. The club has occupied it since August, and large bowling alleys have been added and a billiard room installed.

Capt. Maralious Shoots Himself.

Capt. John Marallous, a veteran of the civil war and a well-known engineer, committed suicide by shooting himself yesterday afternoon at his home, 757 Sterling Place, Brooklyn. He had been ill for some time, and was despondent. During the war Capt. Marallous was a member of the Thirteenth New York Engineer Corps, and of late years he had been prominent in the veteran society of that organization. For a long time he was employed as an engineer by the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, also serving in a similar capacity at various times for New Jersey railroad companies.

RELIGIOUS NEWS AND VIEWS

The Marble Collegiate Church's New Memorial Window.

Subject Is the Battle of Israel with the Armies of the Five Amorite Kings.

There will be shown to-morrow for the first time, in the Marble Collegiate Church, Twenty-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue, a new memorial window given by Mrs. Sarah A. Sandham in memory of her son, George Augustus Sandham. The new window has for its subject the battle of the hosts of Israel with the armies of the five Kings of the Amorites, as recorded in the tenth chapter of the Book of Joshua. The window particularly represents that portion of the narrative in which Joshua commands, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou Moon, in the valley of Ajalon." The composition shows the serried ranks of the bowmen and spearmen of the victorious army, in the centre of which, drawn by richly caparisoned horses, appears the war chariot, in which stands the majestic figure of Joshua with his hand uplifted in his interpreted command to the sun, arresting it in its declining course.

The lower portion of the window, divided from the upper by the line of the church gallery, shows a previous point of history in the life of Joshua, his departure for Ai, and the blessing bestowed upon him as he leaves to take the sword and shield in defense of the words of Divine command.

The annual service of the Association for Promoting the Interests of Church Schools, Colleges, and Seminaries will be held in All Angels' Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-first Street, to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Bishop Potter will preach the sermon and will be assisted in the service by the Rev. Dr. Charles C. Tiffany, Archdeacon of New York; the Rev. Dr. E. A. Hoffman, Dean of the General Theological Seminary, and the Rev. Dr. S. De Lancey Townsend, rector of All Angels' Church. The annual meeting of the association will occur on Monday in the parish house of All Angels' Church at 11 in the morning, and after the meeting luncheon will be served in the Hotel St. Andrew.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Copyright, 1900, by John R. Whitney.

SUBJECT.—Zaccheus the Publican.—Luke, xix., 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke, xix., 10.

To every careful reader of the Scriptures the names of the blind son of Timeus, and of the rich publican Zaccheus, are almost as closely identified with the City of Jericho as the name of Joshua, who destroyed it, (Joshua, vi., 21-26,) or that of Hiel, who rebuilt it. (First Kings, xvi., 34.) The one was a beggar—the other, rolling in wealth—but there, both became "the sons of God." (John i., 12.) In the highest and best sense it could have been said of each, "This man was born there." (Psalms, lxxxvii., 4.) Both alike were greatly hindered in their efforts to come to Jesus, but the faith of each alike triumphed over every obstacle, and when they found Him, both alike received light and salvation with exceeding joy.

The story of Zaccheus is told only by St. Luke. It is another of those precious incidents in the ministry of Jesus for which we are especially indebted to him. When it occurred Jesus was on His way to Jerusalem for the last time. He was accompanied by all of His apostles. They must all have known of it as well as they did of the healing of Bartimeus. But while two of them—St. Matthew, directly, and St. Mark, as the amanuensis of St. Peter, in common with St. Luke—tell the story of the physical healing with equal fullness, none of them but he makes any mention whatever of Zaccheus. But from the fact that he does tell us this incident in full—and that he gathered the materials for his narrative from "eye witnesses" (i., 2)—it is evident that the wonderful change wrought in the rich publican must have made a profound impression on the people of Jericho. Our indebtedness for the record is still more enhanced by the fact, that in connection with this incident, he records that our Lord declared for the second time, but with more fullness than the first, (Matthew, xviii., 11,) the great purpose of His ministry among men—"The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (v. 10.)

Zaccheus was "a son of Abraham," (v., 9,) and as such was entitled to all of the privileges of the covenant made with that "Friend of God." (James, ii., 23.) These were highly prized by every Jew. His right to them was recognized by our Lord Himself. His home at this time was in Jericho, possibly it was his native place. There he occupied an important position under the Roman Government, and through it had become very rich. These two facts, however, came near to being his ruin. If he had been simply a Roman, he might have been as respected as the centurion of Capernaum, (Luke, vii., 1-5;) or if he had been simply a rich Jew, he might have been held in as high esteem as Nicodemus. But to be a Jew holding a Roman office, and to become rich by its means, were fatal to all hope of winning popular favor.

THE TYPICAL PUBLICAN.

Jericho was one of the principal ports of entry for the large and rich traffic from the East into Judea. This traffic yielded a large revenue to the Roman Government. To collect such revenues, as well as the local taxes, a very elaborate system was in operation, with its headquarters in Rome. By this system they were not paid directly to the Government, but to certain wealthy individuals, or companies, who advanced the amount which had been assessed upon the several provinces, as it was needed. Then under the sanction of the Government, but not under its supervision, these contractors were authorized to reimburse themselves by collecting the taxes in their own way from the people. They were, therefore, known as "Publicani" or "Publicans," because they came in direct contact with the people or "the public."

Generally they were men, not only of wealth, but of reputation, and they resided chiefly at Rome. Apparently they stood very much the same relation to the Government in that day, as the rich bankers and banking houses do in our day, when questions of great financial interest are involved, but not with the same legal safeguards. When they advanced the money needed, there was no rate of interest fixed by law, but the privilege of collecting the taxes carried with it the power to add enough to the principal to cover far more than a fair rate for its use. It is easy to see how greatly this might be prevented and how oppressive it might become.

To make their collections, as a matter of course, these contractors were obliged to employ a large number of subordinates. These were technically called "Portitores," but popularly they were known by the same name as their employers—"Publicani." In each district, especially in regions where the revenues were large, they would naturally be placed under the direction of certain heads, or chiefs. This appears to have been the position of Zaccheus. He was "the chief among the publicans" of Jericho. (v. 2.)

It is not difficult to understand that the collection of taxes under such circumstances, and especially from a subjugated people, was a matter of great delicacy and difficulty. This was particularly so in the case of the Jews, because they had been, as God's peculiar people, so long separated from all other nations. The necessity to "render unto Caesar the things that be Caesar's" (xx., 25) was galling, even when collected by a foreign agent. But when one of their own nation consented to act as tax collector, not only the tax but the collector himself was abhorred, and the more so if he grew rich in his office. The whole class "were accounted as oppressive thieves and pickpockets. Hence it is even said that the Jews would not allow them to enter the Temple, or the synagogues, to partake of the public prayers, or offices of indicature, or to give testimony in a court of justice." (Schaff's Dictionary.) No wonder that the very name of "publican" was synonymous with "sinner" of the deepest dye.

AWAKENING OF ZACCHEUS.

Such a man was Zaccheus. He had deliberately consented to collect from his fellow-Jews the hated Roman tax. In the popular estimation he had thus become not only a traitor to his people, but also a traitor to his God. For no man who valued his own peace of mind, and the respect of his neighbors, and his birthright as "a son of Abraham," would for a moment consent to hold such a position, no matter how great his necessities, or how large the compensation. The fact that he had willingly accepted the office indicates, therefore, that by nature he was not only "little of stature," but also "little" in every other respect—mean, selfish, and narrow. For a number of years, apparently, he had filled this position. During all that time the scorn of his neighbors, his exclusion from social and religious privileges, the resistance of the taxpayers to his demands, and the appeals of his own conscience, had made no impression upon him. Without hesitation, without fear, probably very often without mercy, he had fulfilled his office until he had grown rich from its proceeds.

But now a great change has come over him. What produced it is not recorded. Evidently, however, the passing of Jesus through Jericho had much to do with it. For the great crowd which attended Him was evidently impressed with the thought that He was indeed the long expected Messiah—that He was about to set up His kingdom—overthrow the power of Rome, and all that belonged to it—and "that the kingdom of God should immediately appear." (v., 12.) This opinion must have spread like wildfire throughout the city and awakened a universal interest in the wonderful stranger.

Then the healing of the blind men on the outskirts of the city must have added greatly to this awakened interest. It showed that this distinguished visitor was not only a very great person, but that He was a most gracious person—One endued with divine power. It is not conceivable that, under such circumstances, any one in Jericho could have been indifferent. It must have attracted the attention of Zaccheus and turned his thoughts to Him who was the subject of all this interest. It set him to thinking of himself also, and when he began to think, then he began to grow anxious. It brought him face to face with his position as a Jew and his relation to the promises of a coming Messiah. Was he to be blotted out from all share in those promises? Was he to have no part in "the kingdom of God"?

Evidently some such thoughts must have filled his mind, for "he sought to see Jesus, who He was." (v. 3.) Apparently he at once made every effort in his power to get near Him, but without success. And the more he sought and failed, the more his anxiety and desire naturally increased. If he tried to reach Him in the crowd, the smallness of his stature, and the hatred of the people, always kept him at a distance. He could neither hear Him nor see Him, and he could not himself be seen by Him.

Like the man "taken with a palsy," (Luke v., 18,) however, his anxiety was ready with expedients. It would not be baffled. So one day as "Jesus passed through" the city, (v. 1,) having ascertained the route that He would take, Zaccheus ran far ahead of the multitude which surrounded Him, and overcame both the infirmity of his stature and the interference of the people, by climbing into the overhanging branches of "a sycamore tree." There he waited and watched for Him whom he longed to see above all others.

AWAITED THE LORD'S ARRIVAL.

At last He drew near. A great company was with Him. Every one in that crowd was anxious to get as near to Him as possible, and undoubtedly they pushed and jostled with each other, as such crowds generally do, to secure favorable positions for seeing and hearing. But they were moved by mere curiosity and excitement. None of them had the longings which filled the mind and heart of Zaccheus. What those longings were is clearly declared by the echoing results. Jesus, however, Who always "knew what was in man," (John, ii., 25,) understood them at once, even before He saw the man that felt them. He knew not only that this man had "sought to see" Him, but that he longed to hear from Him some gracious word that would give him peace. This word He had already purposed to give.

So "when Jesus came to the place, He looked up and saw him, and said unto him, 'Zaccheus, make haste and come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house.'" (Verse 5.)

It was the gracious assurance that his silent prayer had been heard. All unworthy as he recognized himself to be, this long-expected Messiah had not passed him by. He had not only looked upon him graciously, but He had bidden him to hasten to come unto Him. And He had not only bidden him to come, but He had actually promised that He would Himself come into his house and abide with him. It is the wonderful invitation, and the wonderful promise, which He always makes to the penitent sinner.

As soon as Zaccheus heard the word of Jesus "he made haste and came down; and received Him joyfully." (Verse 6.) It was a day of great blessedness to him, for it brought "salvation" to his whole house. (Verse 9.) Then was fulfilled the promise, "if any man hear My voice and open the door, I will come into him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." (Revelations iii., 20.) When they sat down at the table, Zaccheus was the host. Jesus supped with him. But all that he had to spread before his Lord was his poor, mean, sordid, and sinful life, and we can easily understand that he laid it all before Him. It was a relief to confess it all.

JESUS THE HOST.

Then Jesus became the host. Zaccheus supped with Him. Then He spread before His penitent guest all the riches of His grace, and the fullness of His promises, and He bade him eat and be satisfied. And as he ate he received the assurance: "This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham. For the Son of Man is come to seek, and to save that which was lost." (Verses 9, 10.)

This communion with Jesus made a marked change in the mind—and heart—and life—of Zaccheus. He became another man, and the world in which he lived became another world. His eyes were opened now to see himself and his relations to those about him. His wealth had new responsibilities and privileges, and the needy, claims which he had never seen before. His old life, also, appeared in a new light, and it demanded that he should make restitution for every act of oppression, whether intentional or not. His determination, therefore, was prompt, just, and liberal. "Behold, Lord," he said, "the half of my goods I give to the poor—and if I have taken anything from any man, by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." (Verse 8.)

This could not have been, as some have supposed, a boasting declaration of what he had always been in the habit of doing. For if this had been his usual course, it would have gone very far toward the removing of prejudices against him on account of his office, and given him a place in the confidence and esteem of the people. We may well believe, therefore, that it was the honest confession and determination of a true repentance. It marked the beginning of a new life in him. It showed that Divine grace had changed the selfish grasper after riches, into the liberal benefactor of the poor—the unjust extortioner, into the honest and upright citizen—the impenitent sinner, into the humble and believing child of God. This is always its effect when Jesus is "joyfully received."

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

What is said of Bartimeus and Zaccheus in their relation to the City of Jericho?

By whom is the story of Zaccheus told, and what is said of the fact?

To what racial privileges was he entitled, and what marred his popularity?

How were the revenues of Roman provinces collected, and what position did Zaccheus hold?

How were such tax collectors regarded by the Jews, and what did this position of Zaccheus indicate concerning him?

How had the passing of Jesus through Jericho, and the healing of Bartimeus, affected him?

What did he do, and what was the result?

How did he receive Jesus, and what promise was then fulfilled?

What was the effect upon him, and how did he show it?

What indication is there that his declaration was the honest confession and determination of a true repentance?

DUTCH-PORTUGUESE CLASH

Envoys at The Hague and Lisbon Leave Their Posts.

Difference Is Owing to Withdrawal of the Exequatur to the Dutch Consul at Lorenzo Marques.

LISBON, Dec. 7.—The Minister from the Netherlands to Portugal and the Portuguese Minister at The Hague have left their respective posts. It is believed that a difference has arisen on the subject of the exequatur to the Dutch Consul at Lorenzo Marques, which the Portuguese Government has withdrawn.

The tension between Portugal and Holland appears to have been emphasized, perhaps not altogether unintentionally, by the peculiar warmth of King Carlos's toast to Queen Victoria at the banquet given yesterday evening at the Royal Palace to Vice Admiral Sir Harry Holdsworth Rawson and the officers of the British fleet now in the River Tagus, and by the telegram which the King afterward dispatched to Queen Victoria, thanking her Majesty for sending the fleet and for the friendship thus demonstrated.

"I beg to record," telegraphed the King, "my great satisfaction at the frank and loyal alliance uniting England and Portugal."

In the course of the speech, in which he toasted Queen Victoria, the King said:

"England has often shared the efforts and glories of Portugal. Our mutual friendship and close alliance are strengthened by history and the blood shed together in causes which have always been just."

Admiral Rawson replied that the words of the King harmonized with the thoughts of the Government and people of Great Britain.

Observers think the speeches and telegram constitute an intimation to the world that Portugal can count on strong support if necessary.

THE HAGUE, Dec. 7.—While it is not denied that the Minister of the Netherlands at Lisbon and the Minister of Portugal here are temporarily leaving their posts, it is semi-officially declared that there is no question of the Ministers being recalled.

It is explained that Count de Selir, the Portuguese Minister, is proceeding to Lisbon on a few days' visit to verbally explain the difficulties which have arisen in connection with Mynheer Pott, the Dutch Consul at Lorenzo Marques.

MADRID, Dec. 7.—The Imparcial says it considers the rupture of relations between Holland and Portugal to be very serious. It adds that it was due to the intrigues of Grest Britain, further asserting that Portugal is now under the tuteiage of Lord Salisbury.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—The Lisbon correspondent of The Standard says:

"Portugal's first request to Holland to withdraw Mynheer Potts was made on Nov. 17. Holland offered on Nov. 27 to give him a threem onths' leave of absence, and Portugal accepted this solution on condition that he should be withdrawn at the expiration of his leave.

"Holland did not reply until Dec. 4, when she claimed the right to make a prior investigation at Lorenzo Marques. Portugal considered this impertinent, and withdrew Pott's exequatur.

THE CAUSE OF THE QUARREL.

The cause of the quarrel between Portugal and Holland is the claim by the former country that the Dutch Consul at Lorenzo Marques has been violating treaty obligations by using his office as a means of actively helping the Boers. Mynheer Pott, the official in question, was, until a few weeks ago, also the Consul of the South African Republic at Lorenzo Marques, and Portugal withdrew his exequatur after representations had been made by the British representative.

At the outbreak of the war in South Africa the attitude of Portugal was distinctly unfriendly to Great Britain. It was through Lorenzo Marques and the Netherlands Railway that the Boers obtained their munitions of war. Punch had a cartoon which expressed the general opinion in England as to what was going on. It represented a wharf at Lorenzo Marques, with guns marked "grand pianos," gun carriages marked "reaping machines," and ammunition labeled as "cheeses." A Portuguese official was represented as saying:

"I hope there's nothing contraband here."

A big Boer replied with a grin:

"Oh, of course not."

Later on, however, as soon as the first British successes occurred, the attitude of Portugal toward the Boers began to cool. It grew cooler and cooler as Roberts got nearer and nearer to Pretoria, and when he reached that city Portugal was as much pro-British as she had formerly been pro-Boer. Permission was given to a British force to march through Portuguese territory, in spite of the agonized protests of the Boers, and the officers of the expedition were feted by the Portuguese officials.

When Mr. Krüger was in Lorenzo Marques he stopped at the house of Mynheer Pott, and the Portuguese placed a cordon around the house, to prevent Krüger communicating with his associates. There were many disputes when the Dutch cruiser Gelderland arrived to take Mr. Krüger to Europe, and his departure was hastened, owing to the attitude of the Portuguese officials.

It is thought probabie that the officers of the Gelderland made a formal complaint against the Portuguese officials as soon as they arrived home, and this may have added to the friction between the two countries.

KRUEGER'S PLANS ABANDONED.

Gives Up Proposed Visita to Capitals—He Is Officially Welcomed by Dutch States General.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—"Mr. Krüger has abandoned all the proposed journeys to other capitals," says the Brussels correspondent of The Standard, "and all further diplomatic efforts to secure arbitration will await at The Hague the development of events at the seat of war."

According to The Hague correspondent of The Standard, Queen Wilhelmina will receive Mr. Krüger in audience next Saturday.

THE HAGUE, Dec. 7.—The Presidents of both Chambers have sent letters to Mr. Krüger welcoming him in the name of the States General. While the President of the lower house merely expresses sympathy, the President of the Senate expresses approval of the noble purpose of Mr. Krüger in attempting to put a stop to the unjust war forced on him in such a barbarous manner, and hopes it will result in the independence of the republics being assured forever.

Mr. Krüger received various officials today, and the enthusiasm of the crowds outside compelled his frequent appearance on the balcony.

An official request has been transmitted to Queen Wilhelmina for an audience.

ACTRESS THREATENS PUGILIST.

Miss Drew Says Jeffries Must Apologize or She Will Sue for $50,000.

There is consternation in the Sheriff's office. Under Sheriff Mulvaney has gone into training, as also have all the deputies. Warden Pickett of Ludlow Street Jail has also commenced to engage in active physical exercise. All this is due to the possibility of their having to take into custody a prizefighter.

The prizefighter is James J. Jeffries, who is now posing as an actor. The complaint about to be made against him is that he trifled with the affections of Dorothy Drew, a vaudeville performer, and she wants either an apology or else $50,000 damages. Fromme Bros. have been retained by Miss Drew, and hold certain tender epistles supposed to have been written by the pugilist-actor.

The controversy grew out of a recent interview made public by Mr. Jeffries, in which he characterized the rumor of his engagement to Miss Drew as "a malicious lie." She insists that an engagement did exist, but that now she would not marry him under any circumstances.

LIBERALS CHECKMATED BY MR. CHAMBERLAIN

He Announces that Boers Are Soon to Have Civil Government.

AMENDMENT IS WITHDRAWN

LONDON, Dec. 8.—Mr. Chamberlain still fills the political stage. An unexpected but adroit announcement by him in the House of Commons yesterday that civil government would be given to the two Boer countries, coupled with his promise to limit farm burning and other severe military measures so far as possible, took the bottom out of the chief amendment of the Opposition to the address, and it was withdrawn.

This new phase, combined with the failure of the Krüger mission and the fact that the Worcester Dutch Congress passed off without trouble, will persuade the public that the South African situation is less menacing than has recently been supposed and will help to accomplish the main object of the Government—the securing of the consent of Parliament to the necessary financial measures.

Thus, although the session is likely to be prolonged beyond a fortnight, which the Government had hoped would not be the case, it will probably be less stormy than was anticipated. The remark of Herbert H. Asquith, (Radical,) member for East Fifeshire, this evening that the moving of the amendment was justified by Mr. Chamberlain's declarations was about the only thing left for the Liberals to say after the Colonial Secretary sat down.

In pursuance of an agreement reached by the Liberals, "owing to the unsatisfactory nature of the Government's explanations," Alfred Emmott, (Liberal,) representing Oldham, moved an amendment to the address to the effect that it would conduce to the pacification and future good relations of the races of South Africa if measures securing the liberty and property of those who surrender, and providing for the future settlement of the territories be announced at the earliest moment possible.

In the course of a lengthy speech Mr. Chamberlain said the Government hoped—it was hope, and not prophecy—that very shortly, indeed before the House met again, something in the nature of a civil administration might be established in both the Orange River and the Transvaal Colonies. Sir Alfred Milner, he added, would be appointed Governor of both.

Here, Duncan Vernon Pirie, (Liberal) member for North Aberdeen, an ex-Captain of the Aberdeenshire Militia, who recently returned from South Africa, where he went to look after the remounts department when the war broke out, interrupted Mr. Chamberlain, saying:

"You will lose South Africa."

Continuing, Mr. Chamberlain said a Lieutenant Governor would be appointed for the Orange River colony, and that both Governments would have Executive Councils, but not necessarily similar Constitutions. Mr. Chamberlain also said he had suggested to Sir Alfred Milner the issue of proclamations in English and Dutch setting forth the Government's intentions, which were animated by no vindictiveness against the men in arms. The Government thought it impossible that reasonable men could ask it to fix a day when full self-government could be granted.

The Government, Mr. Chamberlain said, had laid down three objects. First, to end the guerrilla war. It would not surprise him if the Boers had destroyed more farms than the British. Never in history had a war been waged with so much humanity. The women had only been deported for their protection. The native population was answerable for the acts of proved outrage on women and children, and it had been shown that in no case had a British soldier been justly accused. The farm burning was greatly exaggerated. Lord Roberts had only sanctioned the burning of farms as punishment in cases of complicity in the rebellion or damage done to the railroads. The Government sustained Lord Roberts absolutely. The Government was bound to leave large discretion to the military.

The second object was that, when pacification was accomplished a Crown government would be instituted.

The third object was ultimate self-government.

Mr. Chamberlain went on to say that he hoped the civil government he had outlined would be inaugurated in February. Municipalities would be created as soon as possible, notably at Pretoria, Bloemfontein, and Johannesburg, with all municipal privileges. Afrikanders would be employed as officials as far as possible, and every man, Boer or Briton, would have equal laws and equal liberties.

The Colonial Secretary made some interesting observations as to the economic situation in South Africa, and frankly admitted that there was even a prospect of a famine, a question, he said, which the new administration would have to take in hand the cost involved being met "out of the taxes of the country."

At this point Sir William Vernon Harcourt (Liberal) cheered significantly, and Mr. Chamberlain added:

This statement caused an unusual scene, the Colonial Secretary being loudly cheered from the Liberal benches.

The House, the Secretary went on to say, might rely upon his assertion that house burning as a form of punishment would be used sparingly. "I regret that there has been occasion to employ it at all," he said, "but to whatever extent it has been employed in the past, there will be much less of it in the future."

Mr. Asquith contended that amnesty should be granted to the Boer leaders.

Timothy Healy, (Nationalist,) member for North Louth, declared he warned the Boers against accepting "British shams." He said it was a question whether it was not better to be a dead Boer than a British subject, but he went on to declare that he did not believe the conduct of the British soldiers in South Africa had been as black as that of the American troops in the Philippines.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader, said Mr. Chamberlain's speech was more favorable than the Opposition had expected and that the Government had practically accepted the amendment. In his opinion, there ought not to be a division.

Mr. Emmett then withdrew his amendment.

Joseph Walton, (Radical,) member for the Barnsley Division of the West Riding, Yorkshire, moved an amendment to the effect that more adequate measures should be taken to safeguard the interests of China, and that no demand should be made on the Chinese Government for the punishment of Chinese officials which could not be equally imposed in the case of a European power. The amendment also declared that reparation should be sought in trade facilities rather than money indemnity.

Viscount Cranborne, Parliamentary Secretary of the Foreign Office, in replying, contended that it would not be opportune to make a general statement while negotiations were proceeding. The Government, he said, adhered to the policy announced last August. He asked the honorable members not to imbitter matters by bringing charges that could not be proved. He went on to say that he held a sanguine view regarding the railways in China, but he was not able to say what the powers were arranging as to the waterways and the adjustment of the revenue. He declined also to say anything regarding Russia's action in Niu-Chwang.

"The Government is attending to British commercial interests," he said, "but patience is needed, as the progress is necessarily slow. I hope to lay papers on the table on Monday next, but there has not yet been time to publish the full papers."

The House then adjourned.

LONDON PRESS DELIGHTED.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—Both the manner and matter of Mr. Chamberlain's speech, of which conciliatory tone was in such strong contrast with the heated outbursts of the previous evening, have been received with universal approval, pleasing newspapers on both sides by the evidences displayed of bold and able statesmanship.

"Here surely is a programme," says The Standard, "which the most ardent admirer of Boer patriotism may accept as offering no unworthy means of escape from a struggle that has been honorably and heroically maintained."

The Daily Telegraph says:

"Mr. Chamberlain's statement was a national speech by a national Minister. No man on either side could have bettered it. It enables the nation for the first time to see light through the problem."

CASE ADJOURNED IN COURT

Federal Court's Jurisdiction Questioned in Receivership Application Against the Anglo-American Association.

When Judge Lacombe in the United States Circuit Court called up yesterday the matter of the application for a receiver for the Anglo-American Mutual Savings Association, Charles A. Deshon, the attorney for the company, requested a postponement for a reasonable time in order that he might prepare a plea against the Court's jurisdiction.

Judge Lacombe granted a postponement until Dec. 14, and remarked:

"Even if the court has jurisdiction, the case ought to have been brought in the State courts, where all actions to wind up a corporation organized under the laws of the State properly belong."

Attorney Charles A. Wilson asked leave to file a petition of intervention on behalf of a creditor holding a bond of the association, which bond, it was alleged, had been dishonored. Mr. Deshon said the alleged creditor was really a stockholder. Judge Lacombe said he would not entertain the motion until after the question of the court's jurisdiction had been determined.

Russell & Winslow, representing the complainants in the action against the association, will have as their associate counsel Frederick W. Fleitz, the Assistant Attorney General of Pennsylvania. Mr. Fleitz is not acting in his official capacity, but is in the case to protect the interests of Pennsylvania shareholders. There are said to be fully 2,000 Pennsylvanians owning stock in the association, and a large part of the association's property is declared to be in that State.

Mr. Russell was asked after the adjournment of court what the theory of his clients was as to the cause of the association's embarrassment. He said they believed it was due to the violation by the association of the business principles on which mutual loan associations are usually conducted, and of the articles of its own charter. The usual business of a building and loan association is to furnish money to shareholders with which to make improvements, such loans being secured by a first mortgage on the property improved.

"There are some associations," said Mr. Russell, "which do not confine themselves to this line of business, but which branch out in real estate speculation. We charge that the Anglo-American Association has not only been one of these, but has been the worst of the lot. It not only speculated in real estate, but endeavored to conceal the fact that it was speculating from its stockholders by misleading statements. If you want to know what such speculation by a building and loan association means, read what Bank Examiner Kilburn had to say on that subject in his report for 1899."

Mr. Kilburn's report for 1899 contains the following references to building and loan associations which engage in real estate speculation:

The whole building and loan movement in this State is threatened by the scandals connected with the operations of speculative associations masquerading as mutual incorporations and the machinations of a comparatively few individuals.

The rapid growth of several associations has been due not to their financial soundness, or to the large profits actually made by them, but to the versatility and executive ability of their managers, the alluring advertising matter published, and the capacity for deceit of their glib-tongued agents.

Another form of speculative investment which seems very popular at the present time is the purchase of tracts of unimproved real estate in the neighborhood of some large city, especially in the metropolitan district. In a few instances large profits seem to have been made from such investments, and scattered real estate, improved but unproductive, has in some instances been exchanged for such suburban property to advantage. I am of the opinion, however, that in the majority of cases the results have not been satisfactory, and collusive purchases of real estate have been a fruitful source of fraud.

Among the exhibits filed with the application for receiver for the Anglo-American Association is one in which a comparison is made between the statement sent out by the association in June and the circular issued on Nov. 20. According to the June statement, the assets of the association were $6,213,065.89, and the earned dividends $496,061.04. In the November statement the assets were given as $3,013,305, and the earned dividends as $345,787.60.

A call was made at the association's offices yesterday, and President Thomas L. James was asked for an explanation of these differences. Mr. James said:

"It is all very simple. I can have that explained to you in a moment." He called Mr. Deshon.

"The cutting down of the assets," said Mr. Deshon, "is due to the fact that in the November statement the underlying mortgages do not appear as assets. They were taken out on my advice. I did not regard them as real assets, although it is often the case that they are included as such. It is wholly a matter of bookkeeping."

"Well, how about the large decrease in earned dividends in three months?"

"We paid them out," said Mr. James. "That explains that."

Mr. Deshon said he had made a trip to Buffalo and had spent three days inspecting the real estate acquired by the association in that city. It was all good property, he said, and if properly disposed of would realize more than was paid for it. Both Mr. James and Mr. Deshon strongly reiterated yesterday their statements as to the solvency of the association.

CRUGER COUNTRY SEAT SOLD.

Purchaser Is Winslow S. Pierce, Who Will Build Cottage.

The country seat and farm, known as Idlesse, at Bayville, L. I., owned by the estate of Col. Stephen Van Rensselaer Cruger, has been sold through McVickar & Co. to Winslow S. Pierce, counsel for the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Part of the property is woodland and part of it is under cultivation, the entire tract comprising about 62½ acres and having a frontage of about a quarter of a mile on Long Island Sound.

Mr. Pierce will erect a handsome cottage on the property in the near future—probably on the site of the former residence of Col. Cruger, which was completely destroyed by fire a few years ago.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

Western Presidents Adjourn Without Harmonizing Conflicting Interests.

After a session lasting for three days, the Quarterly Conference of Western Railroad Presidents adjourned yesterday afternoon, to meet again in this city on the first Wednesday of March, 1901.

With the end of yesterday's session the conference completed the first year of its existence, and it cannot be said that these meetings have been overwhelmingly successful. Secret concessions and discrimination in rates and other evils in the rate situation are still rampant in the localities covered by the two most important committees appointed by the conference, the Kansas City and the St. Paul committee, according to the admissions of the Chairmen of these committees and the testimony of many of the freight agents of the various lines which run through that territory.

Some of the Western railroad men left the meeting yesterday plainly dissatisfied with what they called "the obstinacy" of some of the other fellows, whose lines insisted on terms which practically balked all attempts to reach satisfactory agreements by the two above-mentioned committees. President E. T. Jeffery of the Denver and Rio Grande took a more hopeful view of the situation than many of the other railroad representatives. He said yesterday:

"Resolutions were adopted requiring railroad companies to continue in the effort to have their inter-State traffic conducted in accordance with the Inter-State Commerce act. The Kansas City and the St. Paul committee are not yet fully harmonized, and their reports were referred back to them with instructions to proceed as best they could, and to take such action as seemed wise and proper to them, reporting again to the next conference in March.

"At the time when this conference was organized there was not the general sentiment prevailing among railroad men which prevails to-day for the conduct of inter-State traffic in accordance with the Inter-State commerce law. After the many discussions in these conferences it is now conceded that the publicity of all rates and the observance of rules and regulations of the Inter-State Commerce Commission under the inter-State commerce law are of advantage to carriers in a business sense. Moreover, the publicity affords protection and equality to all shippers."

When asked how this publicity could be enforced in the case of a contracting agent who made a secret cut rate, Mr. Jeffery stated that the conference was trying to agree on some plan which would enable it to reach these men and punish them.

President Felton of the Chicago and Alton, who is Chairman of the Kansas City committee, said that the difficulties encountered by the Kansas City committee would be solved by Jan. 1, 1901.

Brief Railroad Items.

Vice President Thorne of the Pennsylvania Coal Company discredits the report that the company has been acquired by the Erie Railroad.

Ground is being broken for the building of the new machine shops of the Jersey Central at Elizabethport, N. J., details of which were published some months ago. They are to cost in the neighborhood of $500,000.

The General Passenger Agents of the Southern Pacific, the Union Pacific, and the Santa Fé systems have been appointed a committee of the Western Passenger Association to arbitrate the dispute regarding the sale of tickets to the Epworth League meeting at San Francisco next Summer. They are clothed with authority to make rates via different routes to California on account of that convention.

The New York Central yesterday began the work of double tracking the Harlem division to Mount Kisco, a distance of fifteen miles from White Plains. New station houses will be built at the six stations between White Plains and Mount Kisco. When completed the White Plains specials will be extended to Mount Kisco and the Tuckahoe locals up to White Plains.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Suggestions by C. C. Shayne.

From now until the holidays, most men are too busy to "shop" in a vague search for an appropriate gift, and many are forced to realize that our hearts are bigger than our purses at this particular time of year, when all regard it as a duty and a pleasure to remember, in some substantial way, those who are dear to us.

Few there are, however—and very few—who have not the time and means to gratify, to some extent, at least, the sentiment which possesses us and grows as the holidays approach. But the real perplexity of the question presents itself: What shall it be? What article will be the most expressive of the sentiment and, at the same time, come within the range of our purse strings?

Furs naturally suggest themselves to the minds of the thoughtful.

THE FIRST STEP IN IMPROVEMENT.

At the dinner of the Reform Club on Thursday evening where speakers considered the condition of the city and how it could be improved, the most suggestive and immediately practical speech was that of Mr. EDWARD M. SHEPARD.

That is not to say that excellent views were not submitted by others. Controller COLER, for instance, placed especial emphasis on one fact that cannot be ignored if we hope to effect any serious or lasting improvement in municipal conditions. It is that "progress"—he preferred that word to "reform"—must depend on the co-operation of large numbers of respectable, right-minded people, not so well educated, perhaps, but just as intelligent as his auditors, who have been led to associate reform movements in this city with encroachments on their personal liberty. When it is recalled that three-fourths of the voters in the old City of New York live on the east and west sides, in what are usually regarded as the tenements, or in habitations only one degree removed from tenements, and that a very large percentage of these are of foreign birth or descent, and make a decent and temperate use of their personal liberty in directions that the stricter American law discourages, we can see the force of Mr. COLER'S suggestion. In the same line was his view that the minds of a large part of the voters cannot be stirred by advocacy of economy, but need the idea of actual and affirmative advantage and progress to arouse them. It is not so much what is or is not expended as it is the returns from the expenditure that impress them. As was remarked by Mr. MCFARLANE, the white uniform of Col. WARING'S street cleaners, with all that it stood for when the force was at its best, was of more worth in affecting the minds of the class of citizens from whom the force was drawn than anything connected with the administration of Mayor STRONG. It is plain that the more we can make this sort of appeal to the people who cast the great mass of the votes the better will be the chance of improving the condition of the city.

But what Mr. SHEPARD had to say was of rather wider application. It was an earnest, almost an impassioned, argument in favor of pressing to passage in the Legislature the amendments to the charter proposed by the Revision Commission. Here, he pointed out, is a practical step in advance immediately before us, and if we can secure the changes in the charter, we shall find the way for further improvement open and much clearer than it now is. Mr. SHEPARD laid much stress on the great importance of improvement in methods and in system as compared with improvement in men only. We had had good men under an inefficient system and they had accomplished little. During the past fifteen years the system had been changed in some degree for the better, and the undoubtedly bad men who have got hold of it can, if we choose, be held to a stricter responsibility. If now we can change the system so as to concentrate still further the responsibility we can get still better results. This is what the amendments to the charter will do. In the increased power of the Mayor to remove his appointees there is the guarantee that he will look more carefully after his appointees. In the possession of that power there is the inducement for the voters to exert themselves more earnestly to secure the right kind of a man for Mayor. The same reasoning applies with peculiar force to the especial evils which we suffer from the imbecility or corruption of the Police Commission. If one man were at the head of the police, and if he were subject to removal by the Mayor on satisfactory proof of his inefficiency or fault, the case would be very different from what it now is. Now we are blaming the Chief of Police, the Commissioners, the Mayor, and RICHARD CROKER. But we cannot strictly and clearly say what is the direct responsibility of any of them and we cannot enforce that responsibility. With the facts actually known to-day, no Mayor who could make a complete change in these facts by the change of one man at the head of the police could resist the pressure of public demand for that change.

There can be no doubt that in his general idea Mr. SHEPARD is entirely right. The rescue of the city from the evil rule under which it has fallen will be far easier if we can secure the extension of the principle of concentrated responsibility for which the Charter Revision Commission has reported. And until that is accomplished there is no more promising field for effort than the Legislature.

SECRETARY GAGE.

It was a very unusual incident in the career of a Cabinet officer that occurred yesterday to Secretary GAGE, when a delegation of some thirty bankers and business men of Baltimore called on him and urged him to accept the invitation of the President to remain for another four years in the Treasury.

Presumably these gentlemen were not all of the Republican Party, as they were representatives of financial and business organizations. They have no particular local interest in the Secretary and might indeed hope in case of his retirement that his successor would be chosen from their section. The reasons they assigned for their request that he remain were solely of a public nature and related entirely to the fidelity with which he had performed the duties of his office and the skill and intelligence with which he had dealt with the trying questions arising during his administration of the department.

We believe that these gentlemen reflect the views and wishes of the business men of the country generally. Mr. GAGE has been a very successful Secretary of the Treasury. He has especially used the influence of his office, which is not as great as it ought to be, in promoting correct ideas of the currency and of finance. It has been fortunate for the country that the President has had so sound an adviser on these subjects, and it is plain that he has appreciated the value of Mr. GAGE'S co-operation. We hope that the Secretary, who did not commit himself very definitely, will see his way clear to complying with the wish expressed by the Baltimore gentlemen.

THE ATTACK UPON MR. CHAMBERLAIN.

The singular acrimony and vindictiveness with which Mr. CHAMBERLAIN was attacked in the House of Commons, in the first debate of the session, were more marked by reason of the cheerful unanimity with which he was not defended. The situation is rare, if not unique. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN is universally recognized in Great Britain as the author and finisher of the war with the South African Republic and the Orange Free State. That war has lasted a year and a quarter, it has strained the resources, the military resources, of the British Empire to the utmost. But it has been successfully carried through. And beyond any question it has been, in Great Britain, a popular war. The latest proof of this is that the war party, the present Ministry, has been returned to power "with a blank check" by an increased majority, and that, in spite of all the scandals of the war, of which some are very serious. On this state of facts the author of the war ought apparently to be the popular hero of the war, since the war has upon the whole turned out well, just as he would have been, and doubtless would have expected to be, the popular scapegoat if the war had turned out badly. But the expected does not happen. In what might be expected to be the flush of his success and his popularity the Opposition finds that the most popular thing it can do is to attack him; and nobody comes to his defense. He is not the hero of the successes of the war, but he is the scapegoat of all its failures. No wonder the good man should show some bewilderment in his occupancy of so anomalous and untenable a position.

We suppose the explanation is to be sought, partly in his own character and partly in the circumstances of the case. As to his own character he is not in the least of an altruist, on the one hand, and he is not a conciliatory sort of person on the other. He is openly a self-seeking and ambitious politician. He saw the objections which the great body of Protestant Dissenters would entertain against a measure of home rule for Ireland, upon the ground that to put the Irish in charge of their own affairs would directly or indirectly increase the power of the Pope of Rome. As BAGEHOT said, "Whenever anything goes wrong an Englishman imputes it, prima facie, to the Pope." This superstition, on the part of the Dissenters, who have always been the strength of the Liberal Party, was the nucleus of the "Liberal Unionist" Party, of which, or of the ultra-Protestant wing of which, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN has made himself the representative. But nothing could be more antipathetic to the careless Gallios who form the strength of the Tory Party proper. The leader of the Liberal Unionists found himself at once distrusted as a Pharisee by the party which he had joined, though it could neither reject nor ignore the assistance he brought it, and detested as a renegade by the party he had abandoned. When he gets himself into trouble there is none to meet his enemies in the gate.

And doubtless he is in serious trouble. The war, after the delivery of the Boer ultimatum, was no doubt popular in England, but it does not follow that Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S conduct in forcing it on and making it inevitable was popular. "It must needs be that offenses come, but woe unto those by whom they come," has apparently been the sentiment of the British masses. If the war had been as short and easy as Mr. CHAMBERLAIN apparently expected, he might have been forgiven for refusing all compromise, for refusing to await the certain results of time. But all has not gone well. The situation in South Africa is distinctly worse than when he took charge of it. And the prestige of Great Britain has been distinctly lessened throughout the world by the trouble it has given her to subdue two little communities of pastoral antediluvians amounting to less than a million in all. She is less valuable as an ally and less formidable as an enemy, according to the consensus of mankind, than she was when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN took charge, according to his critics usurped charge, of her foreign affairs, and plunged her into a war "that could have no triumphs."

The responsibility is a very serious one for any man to face. It is due to Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S haughty and self-confident temper that he has to face it alone and that his own colleagues seem to be among the men who would be most delighted with his downfall. At any rate, they seem to find him a very convenient and eligible scapegoat for offenses for some of which they are quite as responsible as himself. But the cumulation upon Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S head of all the blunders and mischances of the war is not very much to be wondered at, considering his evident readiness to absorb all the credit if there had been no blunders or mischances. What between the Tories and the Gladstonians in the House of Commons, it seems that there is there even a readiness to accept imputations upon his personal and official integrity, upon evidence which would not be accepted in the case of any other conspicuous member of the House. However the member for West Birmingham may manage to pass the immediate crisis, it appears that the whole business of the present session is likely to revolve about his personality. If he survives it, it will be due to an inherent political vitality which will make him even a more remarkable figure than he is already in the Imperial British politics of our time.

THE GAS SUPPLY OF NEW YORK.

The present average quality of gas in New York is quite as good as we need expect, and even better than is likely to be maintained. There are several reasons for this. One is that the lower the candle power of water gas the cheaper it is to make and the larger the quantity used to maintain a given standard of illumination. A gas lean in hydrocarbons works better with the incandescent mantle than a rich gas. For cooking and heating the low candle power of a gas insufficiently enriched does not make itself known to the consumer, since for these purposes it is burned with the blue flame when burned properly. More of it is consumed, however, than would be required of better gas, for the reason that it contains less heat units. Obviously, therefore, it is much more profitable, from every point of view, to sell a lean gas at $1.05 per thousand than one costing more to make and admitting of more economical consumption.

Consumers who are in a position to offer effective objection to a deterioration in the quality of gas are not consciously annoyed or inconvenienced by it. If they can afford to introduce electricity they do so, remaining customers of the company, and are well satisfied. If they cannot, they buy incandescent burners and do not thereafter know whether the gas is good or bad. If these are too expensive, in first cost and frequent renewals, and they are compelled to remain dependent for light upon what the lava tip will give, they are likely to have difficulty in finding a satisfactory answer to the question, What are you going to do about it?

The provisions of the New York charter touching the quality of gas which a company or companies operating in the city must furnish are ludicrously futile. The duty of seeing to it that the gas supply is maintained at the legal standard of purity and luminosity devolves upon the Commissioner of Buildings, Lighting, and Supplies. He must cause photometric tests to be made at least once every six months, to make sure that the gas does not fall below twenty candle power; but he must not make such tests of a company's output oftener than once a week. If three consecutive tests, covering a period of three weeks, shall show the gas to have fallen continuously below the legal minimum of twenty candle power, the company distributing such gas shall be liable to a fine of $100. This is very low candle-power legislation. A minimum of twenty candle power for carbureted water gas is an unreasonably low standard; twenty-five or twenty-six would be about right. The regular output of one New York company during the period of competition for customers touched thirty candle power; that of another company was for years maintained between twenty-six and twenty-seven. The present average is between twenty-three and twenty-four. Only occasionally does even poor gas fall to twenty candle power in New York, and that is probably an accident. It has never happened, we believe, that tests of New York gas for three successive weeks have shown a luminosity below the legal minimum. If it should, the penalty prescribed by law would have no deterrent influence. The saving resulting from impoverishing the enormous output of the plants supplying New York would so far exceed $100 in three weeks that the company could earn a dividend in the difference between its savings and the amount of the fines it would have to pay.

Whoever drew this clause of the city charter was ignorant of the elementary facts of gas chemistry, or else was discreetly advised by some one who knew them very well. Carbureted water gas of twenty candle power is very poor gas for lighting purposes. Coal gas of the same photometric standard would be too good—that is, too rich in hydrocarbons. It is well known to experts that there is an important difference between luminosity at the burner and illuminating effectiveness. We see this in the electric arc, which, measured by the photometer, far exceeds any flame which can be produced; but its illuminating efficiency is relatively very low. Water gas carbureted by naphtha additions to twenty candle power is not as good an illuminant as fifteen candle power coal gas. The brilliancy of the gas lighting of Paris, which every visitor to that city has found so impressive, is effected with coal gas which, by photometric test, shows only an average of thirteen candle power. The claims for water gas which secured its toleration, notwithstanding its known dangers to life and health due to the high percentage of carbon monoxide it carries, were that it was cheaper than coal gas and gave a much better light. These claims might very well be vindicated in New York; but water gas of twenty-four candle power at $1.05 per thousand is not as cheap as coal gas in many American cities, and is certainly not a better illuminant. In heating value the sixteen candle power coal gas represents about 694,000 B. T. units per thousand; the twenty-four candle power water gas about 570,000. With twenty candle power water gas at $1.05 per thousand New York would have the worst light at relatively the highest price of any important American city. It comes very near to this at present.

THIS ISSUE OF THE TIMES.

In the discussion that is now going on among the laymen about the ideal newspaper a moment's consideration might be given to the ethical rating to be accorded to a newspaper that notifies its advertising patrons that beyond a certain predetermined amount of space it cannot accept their advertisements. It looks like turning away business, and might be construed as an evidence of the pursuit of other than purely commercial aims. Possibly it is an approach, a slight but still measurable advance, toward the blessed ideal state.

At any rate, THE TIMES found itself in this position yesterday, when it was compelled to announce that it could not guarantee the insertion of advertisements in to-day's issue beyond the limits of the usual space required for regular advertisers. From them, of course, it could not withdraw the accommodation to which they are entitled, but neither would it curtail the space required, to which the readers of the paper are entitled, for the printing of the news; and it did not wish to add to the avoirdupois of a paper already swollen to unusual bulk by the issue of the fifty-six-page SATURDAY REVIEW which accompanies and is a part of this day's edition of THE TIMES.

There are many, no doubt, who will insist that sixteen pages in the main sheet and fifty-six pages of THE SATURDAY REVIEW is too much. It is certainly enough, yet it is as little as was found to be compatible with satisfactory completeness. On two occasions THE SATURDAY REVIEW has consisted of forty pages. To-day's issue makes a new record. We hope it will be considered to have made a new record of value to the reader. Certainly for any one who cares for books or is in the habit of buying books, and especially for the Christmas buyer, the publishers' announcements of their publications cannot fail to be valuable aids in the effort of selection. To the publishers' announcements THE SATURDAY REVIEW adds two lists of fifty each of the most desirable holiday books. Holiday is a term of broad and comprehensive meaning when applied to books. In the lists given there will be found much good literature for all days and years. THE SATURDAY REVIEW of to-day is a pretty good publication to keep handy during the buying season.

Daniel R. Goodloe.

From The Wilmington (N. C.) Messenger.

In 1838, we recall, was our first acquaintance with the venerable Mr. Daniel R. Goodloe, a native of Franklin County, N. C., an honest, upright gentleman, a man of ability, and a journalist of extensive experience. He was at one time under the very able Henry J. Raymond, who founded THE NEW YORK TIMES, the Washington correspondent, and also a staff writer for it. He has resided in Washington, D. C., most of the last half century, but in advanced age, as we learn from our esteemed contemporary, The Louisburg Times, he has returned to that town, where he will reside. We are glad to greet his return to his native State, for not only have we long known him, but have held him through the decades as a personal friend, one of the most perpendicular, truthful, worthy men we have known.

LOVE'S ROSES BY THE WAY.

Arthur J. Burdick in Los Angeles Herald.

Life may be a thorny way—
Briers in our path—
But the fragrance of the rose
A sweet soothing bath.
Vicious thorns may tear and sting;
Symbols they of wrath;
Love's sweet roses ever bloom
Fragrant by our path.

Life may be a cloudy way—
Hid the heaven's blue—
But the sun still sheds its light
Up above for you.
Though the storm to-day may rage
And pour out its wrath,
After all, God's sacred bow
Arches o'er the path.

Life may be a weary way—
Weariness brings rest.
Sorrow's hand may fall on us—
Mourning ones are bless'd.
Winds may chill and thorns may sting,
Storms may vent their wrath;
Love's sweet roses still will bloom
Fragrant by our path.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

An Amazing Exhibition at the Herald Square Theatre.

Time Wasted in Theatres by Habitual Theatregoers—Rejane's Newest Play —Brutality of British Audiences.

An amazing exhibition of human weakness and folly was given at the Herald Square Theatre yesterday afternoon, when a so-called play entitled "Sold and Paid For" was performed in a slipshod and slovenly fashion before a scant audience largely composed of friends of the author and professional theatregoers. In the ignorance of art and literature displayed in its composition, the puerility of its plot and attempted characterization, the manner of its pictorial production, the queer dress of the actors supposed to represent types of contemporaneous fashionable and wicked society; in the extravagant badness of the acting, this performance clearly established a record.

The most inveterate theatregoer of the last twenty years could remember nothing nearly so awful. "My Life," in which Mme. Janauschek once tried to act, and the piece called "An Iron Creed," which was received with roars of ironical laughter at the Fourteenth Street Theatre one night years ago, seem, in remembrance, works of solid worth compared with this "Sold and Paid For."

John C. Dixon, who acts the character of the Archbishop in Mansfield's "Henry V.," wrote this thing, and, as two other actors who had been severally engaged to play the hero's part had fallen by the wayside, he took up that rôle in the performance, and whined and wheezed through it in a manner which seemed funnier, if one felt in a frivolous mood, than the play itself. It will not do to excuse him on the ground that he was not prepared for the part. There is no law to compel any man to make such an exhibition of himself. Nor should there any false idea of kindness prevail to suppress the exact truth about the balderdash put forth by Mr. Dixon under the name of drama. Such ancient manikins as the cold-hearted "man of the world," who had bought and paid for his wife; that emotional and ill-treated young thing and her blessed prattling babe; the lover sighing like a furnace, indeed, and looking like a stoker, and the customary frivolous dames of fashion, were clumsily employed in imitation of the moralizing "society drama" of the era of Bartley Campbell. The construction was utterly hopeless, the dialogue like the maundering of a half-intoxicated barroom elocutionist.

There ought to be no room on the dramatic stage for such ignorance, carelessness, and humbug. Mr. Shubert knows well enough that this sort of thing deserves no word of commendation. Two acts of "Sold and Paid For" seemed all that human nature could endure. The house bill announced that the performance was given for the benefit of the widow of Joseph O[illegible] but there was surely not enough money in the theatre to pay for the decent interment of the play.

Most of the poor actors were wholly unknown to fame in this neighborhood, and likely to remain so, and therefore will not suffer in the public mind. But the character of a French Count was acted by a veteran, Henri Laurent, who used to sing Rackstraw in "Pinafore," and has been out of sight many years, while in the heroine's rôle, Etta Butler, who some time ago happily travestied Mrs. Fiske as Becky Sharp, seemed to try to burlesque Olga Nethersole and to fall dismally even in that generally easy task.

Theodore Moss has done a courteous thing in sending out the tickets to the reviewers for the performance of Miss Mannering in "Janice Meredith" next Monday night, by inclosing with them the positive information that the curtain will rise at 8:30 o'clock. The tickets of Wallack's have always announced the hour of beginning as 8. In consequence, many first nighters sat for a whole half hour waiting for the curtain to rise when Mrs. Le Moyne began her engagement there.

It is a pity Mr. Moss cannot send his communication directly to all the first nighters. Newspaper announcements of such trivial things seem to be overlooked or forgotten. A great deal of valuable time has been wasted by punctual folks at first nights thus far this season. The printed announcements of the time the curtain will rise generally seem to mean nothing. On the other hand, the first performances of "Henry V.," "L'Aiglon" in French, and "The Gay Lord Quex" were begun to barely half-filled houses.

Robert Marshall's newest comedy, "The Second in Command," now running at the Haymarket Theatre, in London, and likely to be seen here very soon, is making a big hit in spite of its obvious artifice, it seems, and the lack of first-hand observation of nature in its characters. It tells a pretty, simple, and old-fashioned love story in a pretty way, the London reviews say, and it contains congenial parts for good actors. The best part is thought to be that which gives the play its title, Major Bingham, acted in London by Cyril Maude. But Bingham is not the hero of the play, which was not called "The Second in Command" when it left the author's hands, and perhaps he will not seem the most important of the personages when the piece is acted here.

Abel Hermant, one of the younger dramatists of the present hour in Paris, is the author of the latest play in which Mme. Réjane has triumphed. It is called "Sylvie; ou, la Courisse d'Amour," and the time is that of the French Revolution. Indeed, the whole period from 1789 until the ascendency of Napoleon is covered in the action. It is perhaps needless to say that the character of this Sylvia differs somewhat from that of Shakespeare's, who was "holy, wise, and fair." She has three husbands in the course of the action, and is divorced from two of them. But there seems to be more of the popular kind of dramatic spirit, more romance and picturesqueness, in this drama than in anything else Hermant has yet done.

It seems curious to read in the London newspapers signed communications upholding the right of spectators to hiss and boo the author of "first nights" if they do not like the play. The custom in such cases is to politely lure the author to the footlights and then bait him with hisses, groans, and catcalls. This was done lately at the St. James's Theatre with a woman, Mrs. Craigie, and the manager, Mr. Alexander, has denounced the custom as brutal and vulgar, through the newspapers. Brutal the Briton frequently is, no doubt, yet it must be a good thing for the cause of art to treat dramatists and actors occasionally to some sort of wholesome discipline. We go too far to the other extreme in this town.

"Lady Huntsworth's Experiment," by R. C. Carton, will be the next play at Daly's, instead of "A Dash for a Throne." In this Hilda Spong will appear as the purposeful wife of a dissolute Earl, who earns her living as a cook, and Mr. Mason will also have an uncommonly congenial rôle. It was the intention to do "Lady Huntsworth's Experiment" at the Lyceum at the close of Annie Russell's engagement, but another play will be substituted for it, perhaps "The Second in Command."

News comes from London that Rudyard Kipling has dramatized his own long story, "The Light That Failed." Two stage versions of this have already been seen, but neither lasted long.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Production of Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" and Return of Kreisler.

The second public rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society took place yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall with the customary surroundings of gentle women and music students in search of light upon their art. The programme consisted of the following numbers: Beethoven's overture to "Egmont," Bruch's G minor violin concerto, Richard Strauss's tone poem, "Ein Heldenleben," ("A Hero's Life"); Tartini's "Devil's Trill," and Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries." The violinist was Fritz Kreisler, the young Austrian virtuoso, who was here years ago as a boy wonder. The feature of the concert for those who regard music as more important than musicians was the introduction to New York of the latest creation of the unique Richard Strauss of Munich. The Philharmonic Society had made unusual preparations for this performance, and the orchestra was increased to 120 men, 10 more than the regular number.

Mr. Strauss depicts the life of a hero in a continuous composition, divided into six periods. In the first division the hero himself is set before the imagination by means of his representative theme, which is germinal and sprouts its branches through the entire work. This theme is associated with three others, which may be taken as typical of the hero's admirable qualities, his vigor of mind, his energy, and his buoyancy or emotionality of feeling. In the second division the hero's opponents are pictured, his critics, wretched creatures, who are caricatured by piccolo chromatics and nasal stopped cornets. The third period brings the hero face to face with his inamorata, represented by a solo violin. She is capricious, coquettish, coy, and at last yielding. He is her humble suitor. They unite in a duet and are musically happy. Their dream of love is interrupted by the trumpet call to battle, (Division IV.). The battle engages the entire 120 men; it is an alarming period. The survivors play the fifth period, which shows us the hero enjoying the fruits of his victory and engaged in intellectual activity. We now learn that this hero is the one who wrote the symphonic poems, "Don Juan," "Macbeth," "Tod und Verklaerung," "Til Eulenspiegel," and "Don Quixote," the opera "Guntram," and the song "Traum durch die Dämmerung," or in other words, Mr. Richard Strauss of Munich, for we hear quotations from all these compositions. The last division that "ends this sad, eventful history" is the hero's renunciation of the world and his death. At first he struggles against the inevitable, then resigns himself. He lives in the country; he tells us that with an English horn. He has memories; we hear fragments of the earlier music, the love theme. At last the hero dies, and his representative theme ends the work in a paean of majestic power.

That most of this is fit material for musical delineation no one will deny. Most of it is emotional, and the greater part of that which is not is suitable for descriptive music. One should not fail with a battle scene, for instance, if one has 120 instruments, and fires them all in broadside with full charges. Three trumpets in high, close dissonances will put any sensitive hearer in a fighting mood, and a firing squad of trombones, tubas, and drums can give a lively and cacophonous reproduction of a general assault. Mr. Strauss's battle scene is a good one. Those who have been on the firing line will appreciate its representation of the noise and confusion. After hearing this, Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" was like the chanting of a Chopin nocturne. Mr. Strauss knows that if you have enough instruments and write for them all at once it does not make much difference what you write. But he made the violin parts very hard in his battle scene for all that. It would have been a pity to waste a fiddler.

But to consider this composition seriously, it must be said that only a very anxious, sympathetic, and skilled hearer will find it possible to follow the intricate workings of all its themes. It is a leit-motif work; every theme has a meaning, and so has every development of a theme. One must, as the programme note of Mr. Krehbiel wisely says, concede to the composer not only the right to attempt the expression of the broader emotional moods, which lie so surely within the province of musical utterance, but also every variety of each emotion. And here the hearer must take the composer at his own word or be lost in hopeless confusion. One really requires a handbook to help him through this composition. In an opera, where the text makes plain the intent of the most subtle music, the hearer need not be at a loss, but in absolute music, when the typical-theme plan is carried out in all its ramifications, how is one to know precisely what is meant?

As absolute music this work has two aspects. Technically it is colossal, and it is bold in the conception of its extraordinary proportions. Heine's huge nightingale, Berlioz, shrinks into normal size beside this Strauss. His themes are big with musical power, but his development in the old symphonic sense is not at all remarkable. His weaving of the several themes, however, is masterly. He yields the amazing complexity of modern polyphony, the polyphony of the hazardous cross-paths in acrid harmony, the impinging chromatic curves, with consummate ease. His themes wind about one another with the luxuriance of intertwining vines in the depths of a tropical jungle. And if you grant the premises of the programme, the form is clear and satisfying. And you must grant these premises, or throw overboard your Schumann, Liszt, and Berlioz. The orchestration is notable in the Strauss method, with all its splendors and all its idiosyncrasies. Sometimes when Mr. Strauss aims at producing new and startlingly ugly instrumental colors, he does it by the very simple process of wresting instruments from their natures. It is not an evidence of the possession of genius to write a spiccato passage for an oboe, or attempt to imitate a glissando on a clarionet, or a pizzicato on a trumpet. These things belong to that region of art in which dwell the purple cow and the yellow aster. But on the whole it is not difficult to understand the enthusiastic attitude of some musicians toward the compositions of Mr. Strauss. When a conductor reads one of these scores and sees piccolo passages written for a bass trombone, it certainly does make him sit up.

But when all is said and done, what is the aesthetic result for the hearer, who is not supposed to see the workings of the machinery? That is the person to whom this message is addressed. It is not primarily for musicians, nor for score readers. The object of music is to be heard, and it makes its appeal to the intellect and the emotions through the ear. Let it be said, then, that there are passages of true, glorious, overwhelming beauty in this work, but in listening to it one is often thrown into astonishment and confusion. To say this is to invite the ridicule of the hereafter. Every critic of music knows how hard it is to estimate justly the value of anything which violates established law. Yet it is only by innovations that the art of music has advanced, and every composer, even the honeyed Rossini, has been abused for writing ugly music.

But the critic cannot be a prophet. He is as likely to err on one side as on the other. It is not his business to try to guess what people will think of a work fifty years hence. He must tell how it affects him now, and by giving his reasons invite the reader to think about the matter. That is as far as he can go. With this in mind, then, the present writer can only say that the composer of "Ein Heldenleben" has undertaken to express in music much that cannot be clearly conveyed to the hearer by musical symbols, and that he has chosen to make his symbols harsh and repulsive. Nevertheless we must remember that a few years ago men said just these things of Wagner, who is now seen to be nearly always perfectly melodious. We should, then, quarrel less with Mr. Strauss for his diction than for his deliberate attempts to say definite things to us in music. Mood pictures are all that music can paint. That fact is pretty thoroughly established by centuries of experiment. The ugly noises, the harsh harmonies, the abnormal instrumentation, and the infernal din of this work may all tickle the ears of our grandchildren as much as the luscious instrumental songs of "Tristan und Isolde" now tickle ours.

Dazzling opulence of color, tremendous power in the building of instrumental climaxes, majestic organ tones of orchestral sound in the flowing passages—these, indeed, Mr. Strauss gives us. But there is always a question whether all this technic is not given merely to a display of itself and to the utterance of thoughts that in their naked originality would be but puny. Certainly the lofty serenity of the older art of music, the purity of style, and the clearness of diction are here conspicuously absent, and we, for our part, cannot help recalling the words of one Carlyle: "Higher, higher yet flames the fire sea, crackling with new dislocated timber, hissing with leather and pruriella. The metal images are molten; the marble images become mortar lime; the stone mountains sulkily explode. Respectability, with all her collected gigs inflamed for funeral pyre, wailing, leaves the earth, not to return save under new Avatar."

Mr. Paur, in his reading of the composition and the gentlemen of the society in their performance of it, covered themselves with glory. The thing had been carefully rehearsed, and its presentation was the highest achievement of the Philharmonic in orchestral virtuosity. It will long be remembered. Mr. Richard Arnold, the concert master, deserves especial praise for his excellent performance of the difficult violin obbligato.

Full recognition of the work of Mr. Kreisler cannot be given at this time. It is sufficient to say that the young man returns to us a full-fledged artist, with a big, though not perfectly pure, tone, abundant technic, and a warm, if somewhat exaggerated style. He was heartily applauded for his work. The programme will be repeated at to-night's concert.

LACQUER WARE AT AUCTION.

Fourth Day's Sale of the Joseph W. Sprague Art Collection.

The portion of the collection of Oriental art objects which belonged to the late Joseph W. Sprague of Louisville, sold yesterday at the galleries of the American Art Association, consisted entirely of specimens of lacquer ware. In these the Sprague collection was remarkably rich, a number of objects, such as the Daimio trunks, being of a character hardly ever seen at sales either in this country or Europe.

In spite of this, the prices realized again evidenced the fact that lacquer is as yet hardly appreciated by American collectors. Compared with the amounts paid at this sale for other classes of Japanese art work, those obtained for the lacquer are regarded as extremely low. This is the more remarkable because experts in Japanese art productions regard lacquer as being by far the best investment of any. There are still masters in metal working, ivory carving, and decorative painting in Japan, but hardly a lacquer artist of the old school remains. It does not pay in these days to devote six months to the making of a small object which sells for a few dollars.

The highest price reached yesterday afternoon was $310, for a large cabinet of gold and Nashiji lacquer of the finest quality. A splendid cabinet in black lacquer, with most elaborate brass mountings, brought only $62.50, while the Daimio trunks—containing more decorative value to the square inch than perhaps any other objects that can be placed in a room—went at prices ranging from $30 to $110.

A specimen of Chinese carved lacquer, a cinnabar heart-shaped box, presented by an Emperor of China to a Shogun, was sold to Mr. Savage for $250.

The only prices of the afternoon's sale regarded as high were those for several panels, which were the last objects sold. These are carved, and some of them ornamented with mother-of-pearl and other substances, and sold at from $20 to $70 each.

The sale will conclude this afternoon, when the carved furniture will be offered.

The collection of photographs sold on Thursday all together, the buyer of the first lot electing to take the entire collection, was bought by Seth Sprague Terry for presentation to Columbia University. The innovation introduced by Mr. Kirby, the auctioneer, of selling a large number of lots as one, will therefore be welcomed by those who desire to make use of the collection for purposes of study.

MR. CAULDWELL RETURNS.

John B. Cauldwell, Director of Fine Arts for the United States at the Paris Exposition, was among the arrivals on the Hamburg-American Line steamship Deutschland yesterday. Concerning the American exhibit, Mr. Cauldwell said:

"Our exhibit of art attracted general attention and comment. The comment was most favorable.

"M. Leygues, Minister of Fine Arts for France, and M. Bénédite, Conservateur of the Luxembourg, visited the American section the day previous to my departure. They were enthusiastic in their praise, and said that the exhibit revealed to them American art in an entirely new light. M. Leygues purchased for his private collection works of C. C. Curran, Charles Warren Eaton, Homer Lee, and Sergeant Kendall.

"The French Government desires to purchase several characteristic American works for the Luxembourg.

"Several Russian and Viennese collectors also made efforts to secure works of American artists, but they were disappointed, as the desired works had already been purchased by persons at home. In many instances the works of American artists are more highly appreciated by connoisseurs abroad than at home, a condition which is unnatural, and which, I am sure, cannot last.

"Another splendid impression was that made by our exhibit of sculpture. It was most fortunately placed, both within and without the Grand Palais. Several of our works were secured by the French Government, while Dalin's statue, "The Medicine Man," was acquired by Austria for the Vienna Public Park. The excellence of the exhibit of 1900 can be better understood by a comparison with the exposition of 1889. Then we had sixteen pieces on exhibition, and a bronze medal was our highest award, while this year we exhibited seventy pieces, secured four grand prizes, four gold and five silver medals, besides many lesser awards."

THE FOREST PRESERVE BOARD.

The Forest Preserve Board met at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday. Lieut. Gov. Woodruff, Commissioner Charles H. Babcock, State Engineer E. A. Bond, and Assemblyman Merton E. Lewis were present. The first matter discussed was the claim of George R. Finch of Glens Falls to 11,000 acres of land in Hamilton County. The board agreed to pay Mr. Finch $1.50 per acre for 4,300 acres, and to allow him to remove all the spruce, with a stumpage exceeding eight inches in diameter. Mr. Finch relinquished his claim to the other 6,700 acres, but is to be allowed to remove the timber.

The board then considered the selection of a site for a tuberculosis hospital. The last Legislature appropriated $50,000 with which to commence the work, and a commission of five was appointed to select a site. The members are Howard Townsend, Dr. J. H. Pryor of Buffalo, Dr. Willis G. MacDonald of Albany, Walter Jennings of New York, and Dr. Ezra Kendall of Saranac Lake.

The commission presented a majority report in favor of the selection of Clear Lake, which is on the Mohawk and Malone Road, near Tupper Lake. Dr. MacDonald opposed Clear Lake and favored a site about two miles from Dannemora, where the needed land can be secured free of expense.

In addition to the Forest Preserve Board and the Tuberculosis Commission, Dr. Daniel Lewis of New York, Owen Cassidy of Schuyler, and Secretary Baxter T. Smelzer, all members of the State Board of Health, were present. The selection of a site by the Tuberculosis Commission must be approved by the Forest Preserve Board and the State Board of Health to legalize it. This approval was not given yesterday, but a resolution calling for alternative sites was adopted.

LEAGUE OF MUNICIPALITIES.

Charleston Making Elaborate Preparation to Receive the Mayors.

The official programme of the fourth annual convention of the League of American Municipalities, which will be held in Charleston, S. C., on Dec. 12, 13, 14, and 15, has just been issued, and indicates that this meeting will be more comprehensive in scope than any of its predecessors. The papers, addresses, and discussions will cover almost every problem that confronts the government of a municipality, and the list of speakers includes Mayors and leading municipal officers from cities in every section of the country, besides many celebrated experts on scientific subjects with which municipalities have to deal. No less than twenty-one Mayors alone are included in the list of speakers.

The preparations for the reception of the delegates and visitors by the City of Charleston have been made on an elaborate scale. The convention will open at 10 o'clock next Wednesday morning with an address of welcome to the State of South Carolina by Gov. McSweeney. Mayor Smyth of Charleston will follow with an address of welcome, which will be responded to by the Hon. Henry V. Johnson, Mayor of Denver, Col., President of the league.

The Southeastern Passenger Association has made a rate of one fare for the round trip from this city to Charleston.

STROLLERS COME TO TOWN

People In and Out of Society Welcome the Players—Message from Manchester.

The Strollers came to the Waldorf-Astoria last night and brought in their train a number of society people and others to see "the first performance on any stage" of a musical comedy called "The Cruise of the Summer Girl."

The large ballroom of the hotel, rigged up as a theatre, or as near like a theatre as circumstances would permit, was the scene of the production. The producers in one sense were the Strollers; in another sense they were eight hundred or more persons who paid $3 a seat and, in the majority of instances, hobnobbed with the elect.

"The Cruise of the Summer Girl" is fearfully and wonderfully made. It is the combined efforts of eleven men, seven of whom are musicians and three writers. It cannot be said of it that too many cooks have spoiled the broth, for in that part—the music—where the greatest number of cooks were employed the broth was of the better quality.

The book was unfunny to a degree. Even the best efforts of a few of the Strollers, who were not too nervous to articulate, failed to raise more than an occasional laugh, while as for that part of it which was intrusted to the nervous contingent, it contained original fun the players failed to bring it to the surface.

"The Cruise of the Summer Girl" has a double entendre. "The Summer Girl" is, in the first place, a yacht, and, following the natural bent of that species of craft, she is on a cruise. She carries on board a lot of so-called society people, who do all sorts of queer things—for society people.

On the other hand, there is a Summer girl in the flesh. She is "Muriel Egerton," and she naively tells the society matrons who question her that she is not one of the Philadelphia Egertons, but hails from the fragrant precincts of Hunter's Point. This like of the playwright was a libel on "Muriel," for she was by all odds the most finished society person in the cast. But in her character on the Summer girl, "Muriel" was also on a cruise, and it was so far successful that she managed to bring about a rupture between Jack Langford, the owner of the yacht, and his fiancée, and he became owner of two Summer girls instead of one.

Louis Fitzgerald, Jr., was the owner of the yacht, and later of the lady. He also wrote the book of the play. Mr. Fitzgerald also acted. He likewise sang, but he was saddest when he did these things. As a dancer and as a dancer Mr. Fitzgerald is at his best. He can do many dances. They include buck, wing, soft shoe, cake walking, and the style known to the schools of that art as "fancy dancing." As a fancy danger Mr. Fitzgerald soars into the empyrean.

J. Cheever Goodwin, Safford Waters, and Harry B. Smith wrote the lyrics. The music was contributed by Melville Ellis, Safford Walters, Richard Henry Warren, A. Baldwin Sloane, William F. Peters, Aimé Lachaume, Victor Beigel, and Reginald De Koven. None of these gentlemen either acted or sang. That was left entirely to Mr. Fitzgerald.

In patches the audience was a notable one. The boxes were taken by many people prominent in the society world, and there were also some of these in the less aristocratic body of the house. Throughout the house the women were conspicuous for their handsome gowns. Some one said during the evening that there were many persons not in society who were present and a few in society who were. As the person who made the statement was one of the latter, it is presumed that he knew whereof he spoke.

MANY HUNDRED PATRONESSES.

The programme issued by the Strollers was heavy with the list of patronesses. There were 2,012 of these who were classified, and 120 of whom it was announced that they had been "received too late for classification." Some of the patronesses were present.

It had been announced that the play was to teem with local hits; that there were to be convulsing take-offs on prominent society people, and that the owner of the "Summer Girl" was to be made up like a prominent yachtsman who has defended the America's Cup on a number of occasions.

None of these things materialized. Edward Fales Coward, one of the bright spots in the cast, who played Algernon Montmorency—an actor, of course—spoke of having "played" the Honey Dew Hotel, Hunkidori, and said that when he started he was Hamlet all over, but when he quit he was omelette all over. Another player said of Montmorency that he had looked on the wine when it was free.

Mr. Fitzgerald said of "Mrs. Hemingway Hood, the Queen of Society from Boston, that she was never seen," which fathomed his schemes. These were the extent of the local hits, and the audience refused to be convulsed.

Miss Grace Hoyt, the "Summer Girl," had some pretty songs to sing, and she sang them well. She danced gracefully, and when in the second act she had managed to master her nervousness, she gave a capital performance. Mr. Dyer did good work in the burlesque of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," introduced into the second act, and Edward Fales Coward struggled bravely with a very bad part and succeeded in making something out of it.

For a few minutes Miss May Irwin was in the cast. She played the part of "May Irwin." It happened in the third act, when she came on to a tumultuous encore, upbraiding and succeeding some well-known "coon songs." Miss Irwin's portrayal of "May Irwin" was up to its usual standard of excellence. In the third act, too, which was laid in the Casino at Newport, Miss Matilda Agan sang some Hungarian songs in the Hungarian language.

After the first act there was a commotion in the rear of the room where the managers of the Strollers were gathered. A messenger boy had brought a telegram, and when the recipient opened and read it he beamed on the reporters gathered about and then beckoned them into a room adjoining the theatre. There a typewriter was hastily put to work and the following was distributed:

To The Strollers, Waldorf:

So glad of success at Yonkers. Beat even that record in New York, and then challenge Lipton. MANCHESTER.

The Strollers will give the same performance in the same place nine times. That of last night was in aid of the Red Cross Texas Relief Fund for Galveston, and, with the exception of four performances, which are in aid of the Strollers' Fund, they are for charity.

RUSSELL SAGE BUYS WHEAT.

Wife as Purchasing Agent, Patronizes Suffrage Bazaar Booth.

Russell Sage got a small corner in wheat yesterday. In fact, he got four corners at the Woman Suffrage Bazaar, where Mrs. Sage, acting as his agent, purchased a big box of the growing product at the Kansas booth. The Sage family will live upon Kansas wheat bread for some time to come. Mrs. Sage bought a barrel of flour yesterday and twelve loaves of the hard wheat bread the day before, and has bought several of the well-browned loaves the booth has on exhibition every day of the bazaar. This wheat and the flour come from Sumner County, the banner wheat county of Kansas, through which Mr. Sage's Missouri Pacific Railroad runs. There was a jump in wheat yesterday, and to-day the price of flour at the booth will be raised from $5 to $525. The exhibit will include to-day a fine lot of Kansas butter.

The best exhibit the Suffrage Bazaar has made has been in fine old ladies. Another of its octogenarians, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, was present last evening, a lovely sweet-faced woman, in her plain little brown silk gown, with the wide white collar and close white cap. Mrs. Howe recited the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and it was then sung to the tune of "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah," John Hutchinson playing the accompaniment. The bazaar's daily auction sale was continued last evening, and Miss McKinley, the doll, was bought in by the Ohio booth for $53. She will be put up again to-morrow, the closing night. These auctions are bargain sales.

NEW PERSIAN MINISTER HERE.

Anxious to Introduce American Inventions Into His Country.

The new Persian Minister to the United States, Gen. Isaac Khan, arrived on the Hamburg-American liner Deutschland yesterday. He is a native of Teheran, has never been in America before, and does not speak English. He was the companion of the Shah on his tour of Europe last Summer, and was in the carriage with him at the time of the attempted assassination of the monarch in Paris. On landing from the steamship Gen. Khan, through an interpreter, said:

"I will of course do all that I can to promote and foster the present harmonious relations existing between this country and Persia. I wish to familiarize myself with American customs. Especially do I wish to study your electrical and mechanical appliances and inventions, in order that I may introduce them into my own country. America is very large, but it looks like a good country to live in.

"Yes, I was in the carriage with his Majesty on the occasion of the attempt on his life in Paris," Gen. Khan said, when asked about that incident. "When Salsou, the would-be assassin, jumped to the window of the carriage his Majesty thought he had a message or a letter for him. He had no idea of the impending danger. Fortunately, the French Minister accompanying us broke the pistol before the man could fire. That is all there is to that incident. We were received most courteously all over Europe, the tour being a most pleasant one in every respect."

Gen. Khan went to the Waldorf-Astoria, and will remain in this city a few days before going to Washington.

EIGHT HUNDRED PLAY EUCHRE.

There were forty-six boobies at the big progressive euchre party of the American Army and Navy Aid Society at Sherry's yesterday afternoon. It was one of the biggest progressive euchre parties on record, and the only women in the company who did not wear an expression of green-eyed jealousy on their faces when they looked at the happy forty-six were the five who preceded them and won the first prizes. The first was one of the biggest prizes on record—a six-hundred-dollar piano, which was won by eleven punches. There were two winners of eleven games—Mrs. M. L. Botay of 144 East Fifty-fifth Street and Mrs. Goulard—and when lots were drawn it was found that the former had won the piano. Mrs. Goulard fell heir to a big oil painting, which was the second prize. Mrs. Randall of 123 South Oxford Street, Brooklyn, won a cut-glass bowl; Mrs. Hirsh of 117 Norman Avenue carried off a camera, and Miss Reynard walked off with the most treasured prize of the afternoon, a marvelous millinery creation of black and white.

There was great excitement when the prizes were distributed. Every prize winner tried to crowd upon the small platform which contained the officers of the society and members of the various committees. There were twice as many women as the platform would hold.

"Ladies," cried Mrs. Richard H. Savage, the society's First Vice President, "it is said that this platform threatens to collapse." But not a woman budged an inch. A prize that was worth playing a whole afternoon for was worth the risk of an accident. There were about a dozen men present during the afternoon, including the bugler from Governors Island.

ROLAND REED VERY ILL.

This is the third operation which the acter has undergone.

YALE CLUB'S FIRST NIGHT.

Triumphs on the Gridiron the Main Topic of Discussion.

Pedestrians passing the house at 17 East Twenty-sixth Street last night got the impression that there was a football game or some other sport going on inside. College yells fairly shook the windows at times. The building is the headquarters of the Yale Club, and about 300 members and their friends were enjoying the first "club night." Football was the main topic of discussion.

Addresses were made by Walter Camp, F. Gordon Brown, Captain of the present team; Frank S. Butterworth, the wonderful full back of the team; Henry B. Howland, and Deputy Assistant District Attorney James Fiske Hooker. Refreshments were served throughout the proceedings.

MISS NETHERSOLE'S EXPENSES.

Actress's Brother Testifies In Suit Brought by Marcus Mayer.

The hearing in the action of Marcus Mayer for the accounting by Olga Nethersole was continued yesterday before F. C. Cantine, the referee. The only witness examined was Louis Nethersole, the brother of the actress, and Treasurer of the company. Counsel for Mr. Mayer asked Mr. Nethersole numerous questions as to the accounts of the company, and especially as to the expenses of Miss Nethersole.

"You charged as many items of expense as you could, did you not?" he was asked.

"I did," replied Mr. Nethersole.

In going over his accounts, Mr. Nethersole read some items as "wages," while others he termed "salaries." "You see," he said, "the swell people get salaries and the others get wages."

"That's good law," commented the referee.

Among the items Mr. Nethersole read one for $100 for law charges.

"What's that?" queried the counsel for Mr. Mayer.

"Law charges," repeated Mr. Nethersole. "You ought to know what those are."

Mr. Mayer, who is in ill-health, was obliged to retire at this point, and by consent the further taking of testimony was adjourned until next Wednesday morning.

PLANS OF NEW STOCK EXCHANGE BUILDING

As Drawn by Architect Post They Are Unanimously Adopted.

Description of the Structure Which Is to be Four Stories High and Cost $1,500,000.

The Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange unanimously adopted yesterday the plans for their new building as drawn by Architect George B. Post, and previously submitted to the Building Committee. The committee has been at work on the matter for many months, and they believe that the plans now decided upon will in every way answer the requirements.

The new building will, in the words of one of the Governors of the Exchange, be easily the finest in the financial district. Contrary to the general impression, it will not be a high building, four stories, it is understood, being the maximum height. At first it was intended to erect an eight or nine story structure, but this plan was abandoned when it was decided to maintain the building exclusively as a Stock Exchange affair, with no outside tenants.

The main entrance is to be on Broad Street, that side of the building to cover not only all that territory occupied by the present building, but also that on which the Western Union Building stands, that property having been purchased by the Exchange. Another entrance will be, as at present, on New Street.

The Broad Street wall will be depressed from the second floor to the pediment, and the greater part of the wall will be of glass, thus insuring the greatest possible amount of light and air.

The new building will be new in every sense of the word, and not a remodeled or added structure. The present building and the Western Union are to be torn down, work beginning on May 1, at which time the Exchange will be transferred, bag and baggage, to the Produce Exchange, where quarters have already been arranged for.

The plans as prepared by Mr. Post show a very handsome structure. The walls of the building are to be of marble, with six Corinthian columns extending the entire height of the building front, more or less after the Athenian style." The building is to be set on caissons, and it is understood the foundations will be sunk about sixty feet. The main floor, reached from Broad Street by a flight of about seven steps, and from New Street by about two or three steps, that street being on a higher level, will be solely as a board room, in which all the trading will be done. On the floor below will be built two immense steel vaults, while another portion will be used for telegraph, telephone, and cable wires, while room also will be provided on the same floor for the messengers, whose headquarters in the present building are on the top floor and rather out of the way.

The floor above the board room will be used for offices, while the remaining quarters will be given up for other purposes. Among these may be mentioned several club and reception rooms, meeting rooms, and bath rooms. The building will be ventilated in the most approved fashion, while the lighting will be by electricity, which will be generated by the Stock Exchange's own plant, run by electricians specially engaged.

As for the board room, where all the transactions take place, it will differ little from the present room, except that it will be larger and the trading posts will not be so close together. A gallery will extend around the Broad Street side, but the committee has decided to change the present system of admission, and when the new building is erected no one will be admitted to the gallery unless with cards of admission from members.

The inside finishings will be in keeping with the handsome exterior, marble forming a conspicuous feature of the inside walls also.

As to the cost of the building no exact statement is forthcoming, but it is believed it will be in the neighborhood of $1,500,000. It is hoped that the new structure may be ready for occupancy by May 1, 1902.

DISCHARGED JURORS INDIGNANT

Say Recorder Goff's Action Reflects on Their Integrity.

Many of the sixty-seven talesmen of the December panel of jurymen drawn to serve in Recorder Goff's court, who were summarily discharged for the term by the Recorder Thursday, stood around the corridors of the Criminal Courts Building yesterday and speculated as to the reasons for their sudden dismissal. Several were highly indignant, intimating that their discharge was a reflection upon their integrity. The compensation of jurymen is $2 for each day the juror answers to his name in court. The December panel had served but four days. Assistant District Attorney O'Connor stated that reports of personal disagreements among the jurors had reached him.

"In several cases where the prosecution's evidence was strong," said Mr. O'Connor, "the jury brought in verdicts of acquittal. Some of the jurors told me they had quarreled among themselves." Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, who appeared for one of the acquitted persons, said:

"The action of the Recorder in discharging the jury panel is a menace to the right of every one to an impartial hearing by a jury of his peers. If the Judges of our criminal courts are to be empowered to discharge whole panels of jurors after a few days' service because their verdicts do not coincide with the Judges' view of the evidence, we had better do away with the jury system altogether."

ASTOR HOUSE STORES RAIDED.

The Bureau of Incumbrances yesterday made its regular quarterly swoop on the stores in the Astor House and carted away a double truckload of trunks, barber's poles, signs, and showcases, to the elation of several hundred small boys and bigger idlers. Whenever the Astor House stores are raided, there is a semi-holiday in the neighborhood. The chief attraction is the strategy between D. A. Doyle, the trunkman, corner Broadway and Vesey Street, and the bureau's men.

On the previous occasion the honors of war were with Doyle, who had lined the inside of his showcases with live electric wires. He refused to turn off the current, and the men of the bureau feared to cut them, and had to send for electrical engineers to do the work. Yesterday, however, the men came armed with rubber gloves and a machine shop full of tools. And at that Mr. Doyle had a surprise for the bureau.

The sweep was made shortly after 3 o'clock, and at once began with the trunks and valises which Doyle had heaped on the sidewalk for display. When twenty pieces had been loaded on the truck Mr. Doyle appeared upon the scene. Contrary to all expectations, he nodded pleasantly to the Inspectors.

"I'd begin to feel lonely if you fellows didn't come around once in a while," he said. "I'll not give you any trouble this time. For all I care you can take showcases, trunks, bags, and everything else on the sidewalk, including the coal hole. I'll simply redeem the stuff and build it up again. What are you doing with the rubber gloves, anyway? I'll turn off the current for you this time." And having scored the surprise, Doyle retired.

The bureau's men deferred carting away the cases until this morning, and proceeded to gobble up other obstacles which had no business on the sidewalks. By this time word had passed to all the merchants of what was going on, and all along the line signs and showcases were taken in. Only those signs that were not readily detached fell a prey to the raiders, who landed two barber's poles, six signs, and a seven-foot gold pen that was hanging over the door of John Foley's place.

COLORED NURSES GRADUATED.

Six Receive Diplomas at the Colored Home and Hospital Training School.

Six colored women, graduates of the Colored Home and Hospital Training School for Nurses, received their diplomas last night in the lecture hall of the Academy of Medicine, at 17 West Forty-third Street. Never before in the Northern States has there been regularly graduated a class of colored nurses, the care of the sick of that race having hitherto been intrusted to white attendants. There are in the South two schools for the education of negro nurses, but they are of comparatively recent foundation.

Last night's graduating class consisted of Grace G. Newman, Nettie F. Jarrett, Annie L. Marin, Gertrude Johnson, Margaret M. Garner, and Mrs. M. E. Harris. Among the audience were Russell Sage and Mrs. Sage. The Board of Lady Managers of the home, many of whom were present, is formed of Mrs. Mary W. Booth, Mrs. Everett Herrick, Miss Annie Van Santvoord, Mrs. H. L. Stimson, Mrs. William E. Dodge, Mrs. Charles Dodge, Mrs. A. D. Juilliard, Mrs. George E. Dodge, and Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin.

Dr. Stephen Smith delivered the address to the graduates. He said he had been informed that the course through which the trained nurses of this school were taken was exceptionally thorough, and that the only thing left to complete its success was the way in which its graduates would undergo the test of practical nursing.

The Colored Home and Hospital, which is situated at Concord Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-first Street, has existed under various names for about sixty years. At first its quarters were on the west side, down town. Then it went to First Avenue, between Sixty-first and Sixty-second Streets, whence it was removed two years ago to its present location. The training school is two years old. The course of study is one of two years. Besides the graduating class there were in attendance during the past session fourteen students.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 2 has signally demonstrated its remedial power in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Uric Acid Gravel, and other maladies dependent upon the Uric Acid Diathesis.

"It not only eliminates from the blood the deleterious agent before it crystallizes, but dissolves it in the form of Calculi, at least to a size that renders its passage along the ureters and urethra comparatively easy."

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Springs 1 and 2 have both shown adaptation so remarkable in URIC ACID DIATHESIS that it would be impossible to determine their relative value in these conditions. There are many instances, however, in which a patient, deriving little or no benefit from the water of one Spring, finds relief in the water of the other Spring, and vice versa, which would seem to indicate, unmistakably, some especial curative virtue in each water. Dr. James Shelton, thirty years resident physician at the Springs, was decidedly of the opinion that in Acute Inflammatory Rheumatism, Muscular Rheumatism, Subacute Rheumatism, etc., the water of Spring No. 1 possesses, as a general rule, the greater curative power, and gave preference to this water in treating these cases.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is for sale by Grocers and Druggists generally.

TROOPERS IN TUG OF WAR

Troop Three Defeats Troop One in Squadron A Games.

WINS CUP GIVEN BY F. B. MORSE

Big Gray Horse of Victors Completely Demoralizes the Vanquished Team —Review Follows Games.

A number of clever and difficult feats of horsemanship were performed by some of the most dashing riders in Squadron A last night, in the armory, Madison Avenue and Ninety-fourth Street. The exhibitions of various phases of rough riding were incidents in a series of inter-troop contests for a cup offered by Franklin B. Morse of Troop I. The offer of the cup was occasioned by a desire to bring out troop athletic rivalry as a preliminary contest to the regular games, which will be held about two months later.

There were six events, and Troop 1 and Troop 3 were the keenest rivals for first possession of the trophy. The victory hung on the closing event, the final pull in the tug of war, and when the five mounted men of muscle from Troop 3 won, a mighty roar of applause went up from their friends in the galleries, and Troop 3 was announced as the cup winner.

This final tug-of-war was the most ludicrous and entertaining event of the evening, with the possible exception of some exceedingly clever riding by Holt of Troop 1. In the rough-riding event Holt stood upon the shoulders of two comrades, Kelly and Putnam, the latter riding separate horses, so that Holt formed the apex of this moving pyramid, and in this difficult position the young troopers cleared hurdles and raced at fair speed around the tanbark.

In the tug-of-war there were two heats. Troop 1 defeated Troop 2 in the first, and the victors and Troop 3 lined up at the close of the games to settle the supremacy. The Troop 1 team was J. Clark, P. Stillman, F. B. Morse, F. Becker, and A. Corlies. Troop 3 was represented by Harry Cannon, Marshall Geer, H. Childs, J. Beales, and A. Ward. Ward and Corlies were the respective anchors. The rope was placed around the pommel of the saddle and the anchors then sat upon it. The other men lined up behind and pulled whenever and wherever they could.

The line-up gave the appearance that Troop 1, whose horses were all turned away from their opponents, was going to ride away with the rope with the utmost ease. But the big gray anchor horse of Troop 3, which weighed 500 pounds more than any other horse in the struggle, literally pulled the rope from the hands of the Troop 1 assistants, and two of them were toppled from the saddle. For a few minutes it was a very demoralized tug-of-war. In his efforts to hold the rope Corlies was nearly pulled from his horse, but his men rallied, and after a loss of fifty feet began to gain a few inches.

One of the horses in Troop 3's team then got his legs over the rope, and when it was suddenly pulled out taut the unfortunate animal was nearly ripped in two. A general melée seemed imminent, but after one or two vicious kicks the animal was extricated, and the big gray horse finally pulled the rope so far up to the wall that he could go no further. The last seen of the rope was when it had been completely pulled from Troop 1, and one of the unmounted members was vainly running after it. The Troop 1 men claimed that a sharp trick had been played on them by Troop 3 in bringing in the heavy-weight horse, but the victors smiled in a jubilant manner.

Holt and Cram of Troop 1 were awarded the victory in mounting hurdles, with Ward and Childs of Troop 3 second. The rescue race gave an interesting example of assisting a helpless man to the saddle. Each competitor had to pick up a manikin lying by a saddled horse, place it upon the saddle, and then lead the horse, supporting the dummy, around the ring. Holt was given first honors for this, with Geer second. The escape race was a dead heat between Kernochan and Tilt of Troop 1 and Booraem and R. Quimby of Troop 3.

Major Oliver B. Bridgman was referee of the games, and the judges were Capt. W. C. Cammann, Troop 1; Capt. H. G. Badgeley, Troop 2, and Capt. Herbert Barry, Troop 3. Lieut. Russell Bellamy was clerk of the games.

Following the games there was a squadron drill, which was reviewed by Major Gen. Charles F. Roe, Col. S. H. Olin, Lieut. Col. G. Hurry, Lieut. Col. W. B. Thurston, Lieut Col J. I. Holly, and Major Louis M. Greer.

AMATEURS PLAY BILLIARDS.

Preliminaries in A. A. U. Tournament End with Last Night's Games.

The qualifying round of the National Class B billiard tourney, now in progress under the sanction of the Amateur Athletic Union, at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, was yesterday brought to a close by two games, in which William Paige of Boston and Frank Billiter of Minneapolis were the victors. Mr. Billiter's victory gained admission for him to the final round. Mr. Paige's defeat of A. D. Ferguson in the afternoon match caused a tie between them in point of games won and lost, and their rival eligibility to the final round had to be determined by their grand averages. On this basis Mr. Ferguson's record was the better, his grand average being 4.60, while that of the Boston man was only 4.25, but Mr. Ferguson generously resigned the privilege of competing in the finals to his victor. This leaves Messrs. Billiter, Paige, and Schmitt to enter the final round with Messrs. Hendrick, Kellogg, and Cutler, who qualified in last year's tourney.

The game between Mr. Paige and Mr. Ferguson yesterday afternoon was the most hotly contested and spectacular yet played in the tournament. From a hard leave in the thirty-eighth inning, Mr. Ferguson ran up a string of 56 buttons, the record run for the present tourney. He found the balls left far apart, but in three shots got them together in one corner and then, by skillful nursing in and out of balk, continued until he fouled the red ball on his fifty-seventh shot. He did not use a bridge once during the inning. Mr. Paige secured runs of 39 and 35 points. The lead alternated from one player to the other all through the game. The forty-eighth inning found them tied, with 254 points. At the fifty-fourth inning the score stood 280 to 271 in Mr. Ferguson's favor. Then the Boston man pulled himself together, and by careful execution ran out the game with an unfinished break of 29 points. The scores follow, the play being at fourteen-inch balkline, with the anchor nurse allowed:

Paige—5 3 0 35 2 5 0 1 1 1 2 6 4 2 2 1 4 6 6 8 0 3 0 6 4 0 2 3 17 0 0 30-4 4 1 2 0 2 0 0 2 4 3 2 1 2 9 0 0 39 0 1 1 9 0 29. Total, 300. Average, 5 30-54. High runs, 39, 35, 30, and 29.

Frank Billiter, the Minneapolis player, defeated Edwin O. Presby of this city by a score of 300 to 174 in last night's game. Mr. Presby played his usual open style of game, always a difficult one to an opponent, but Mr. Billiter was equal to the occasion, scoring from a number of very hard leaves. The scores:

Billiter—0 2 3 16 4 0 0 1 1 1 5 9 3 6 2 3 0 3 3 31 12 9 3 0 10 1 11 14 14 1 2 1 1 7 3 4 4 6 1 19 1 6 1 3 1 1 10 6 3 3 24 3 0 15 1 0 0 3 0 0 3. Total, 300; average, 4 56-61; high runs, 31 and 24.

The first two games of the final round will be played to-day. W. W. Kellogg of Chicago, who won third prize in last year's tourney, will meet his fellow-townsman, Charles G. Schmitt, this evening, and the two Boston players, Albert G. Cutler and William Paige, will meet in the afternoon game.

The following table shows the record of the nine contestants in the qualifying round:

Roder Won at Billiards.

Charles Roder easily defeated Raoul Pictet yesterday afternoon in the scheduled game of the amateur novice billiard tournament now in progress at Maurice Daly's Academy. Mr. Roder played one of the best games of the tourney, missing an average of 3 by only one point in sixty-seven innings. The scores follow, a 14-inch balk-line governing, with the anchor nurse allowed:

Roder—9 1 9 3 0 4 0 0 0 2 1 1 0 2 0 10 2 2 0 5 5 0 0 1 8 1 10 2 0 10 11 9 0 5 2 4 0 10 0 0 1 0 5 23 2 2 1 1 4 0 7 1 5 1 0 16 0 0 5 3 2 3 1 0 1 3 2. Total, 200; average, 2 66-67; high runs, 10, 11, 16, and 23.

The game between Mr. Roder and J. E. Lewis, which was to have been played last night, has been postponed until Monday evening. This match will close the series, and its winner will also take first prize in the tournament.

SPORT ON THE SPEEDWAY.

There was plenty of life and activity on the Harlem River Speedway yesterday afternoon. The warm, bright weather brought the road drivers and their fast steppers out in full force, and for several hours before dusk there were many interesting contests.

Among the early arrivals was J. P. Rogers of Brooklyn, behind Hindoo Boy, 2:18½, who was in the pink of condition. After several warming jogs up and down the stretch, Mr. Rogers turned with the green horse Zebe B., driven by L. Deffos, who gave Hindoo Boy a hard brush three-quarters of the way down the stretch, and only lost by a length. The spotted trotter Malacca, 2:18½, driven by Nathan Straus, appeared at his best yesterday afternoon, and covered several very fast quarters besides winning a very pretty race from Swift, 2:16½, driven by John F. Cockerill. The well-known and speedy road horse Robert J., that was purchased at the Madison Square Garden sale by Mr. Straus, was started with Malacca. Both horses had met before, and, although the spotted trotter stepped close to Robert J. for a while, he was no match for his speed, and Robert J. won out with several lengths to the good. Swift, 2:16½, was also matched against Robert J., and although he made a better showing than he did in his race with Malacca, did not have quite speed enough for Robert J., who, Mr. Straus believes, is one of the best road horses he owns.

About the only three-cornered brush of importance that occurred during the afternoon was between Hindoo Boy, 2:18½, driven by J. P. Rogers; William H., with M. L. Reid handling the ribbons, and James Murphy driving his recent purchase, Crystal Chimes. It took several starts to get the horses away, but when they finally got off, Crystal Chimes took the lead, followed by Hindoo Boy. Passing the first quarter post, Crystal Chimes broke, and Hindoo Boy, taking the lead, won by half a length from William E., who would probably have won had there been another quarter to cover, as he was picking up his opponent very rapidly when the line was crossed.

TROTTING BOARD ADJOURNS.

Reviewers Clear Two Drivers and Fix Record on Matinee Winner.

The annual meeting of the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association was ended yesterday afternoon at the Murray Hill Hotel, after a session that lasted four days. The same officials who attended the earlier sittings of the board conducted the final hearing. The most important cases considered were those of James Golden of Medford, Mass., who drove Con Withers in the 2:16 class at the Reedville (Mass.) trotting meeting last September, and John Cheney of Huntington, L. I., who drove Volo in the same races. The cases were practically identical, both drivers having been fined and suspended for "laying up," and having appealed from the decision of the judges. There was a great amount of evidence, and the ruling of the board, vindicating both men and returning to them the amounts they were fined, is important as bearing on future cases. The reviewing body made a long report on the two cases, in which it was set forth that Frank Subert, one of the judges, was not present when the sentence imposed on Golden and Cheney was pronounced, and that as he was not present the other judges, Frank Hall and Charles Wittemore, had exceeded their authority in fixing the penalty as they did. The provisions of the rule covering the case were defined, and the decision placed on record was one that will exact rigid adherence to turf law by judges of trotting races in future.

Another case of importance to amateur drivers was that of Harry K. Devereaux of Cleveland, Ohio, who asked a decision as to whether or not his horse, John A. McKerron, which trotted a mile in 2:10 in the race for a trophy at a Cleveland matinée meeting, had acquired a record of 2:10. Mr. Devereaux contending that the trophy in question was one which belonged to the club and which could not become his property. The ruling was that John A. McKerron had made a record of 2:10, which would be a bar to him in future races on the ground that the trophy in question was one which could be won. The ruling, in part, was as follows: "When a cup can be won it is a premium, and heat winners in a contest for it acquire a record or bar, but when a cup cannot be won, or, in other words, is a perpetual challenge cup, heat winners in contest for it do not acquire a record or bar."

The Empire City Driving Park of New York, the Utica Driving Park of Utica, N. Y., and the Marlborough Driving Park of Marlborough, Mass., were suspended for non-payment of premiums offered for races. The officers of the Queens City Trotting Association were fined $500 for having conducted a race meeting in association with the expelled men Clark M. Smith and Frank Carroll, both of Elmira. Application for the removal of expulsions were denied in the cases of M. Olivette, Elmira, N. Y.; F. R. Hayden, Farmington, Me.; J. L. Shields, Punxutawney, Penn. Sentence of expulsion was recorded against F. R. Stone for "ringing" the mare Mattie as Laddie's Girl. Removal of suspension for W. E. Wilcox of Westfield, Conn., was denied. Reinstatement; free of all penalties, was granted to the following: S. A. Hershberger, Burns Mills, Md.; Samuel Gallagher, Pittsburg, Penn.; John F. Barrett, Deering, Me., and Theodore T. Maxfield.

JOCKEYS HOME FROM ENGLAND.

Four American jockeys who have been conspicuous on the English turf in the latter part of the racing season of 1900 were passengers on the ocean liner Deutschland, which arrived in port yesterday, twenty-four hours late. The jockeys were the brothers Lester and "Johnny" Reiff, and Daniel Maher and "Clem" Jenkins. The Reiff brothers did not attract much attention in England until the racing year was well advanced, when Lester, the elder, by reason of being on even terms with the most successful English riders and the noted Tod Sloan, compelled consideration, while "Johnny" in the meantime had taken rank with the most successful of the English horsemen and was regarded as the best lightweight jockey the turf had ever known. Maher and Jenkins rode on the New York tracks until late in the season just ended, when they left for England, Maher to ride for Pierre Lorillard and Jenkins to find employment and make a new career for himself, after having been in trouble through the greater part of the season with the American racing authorities. Their success was nearly as great as was that of the Reiffs.

The news of the English Jockey Club's action in the case of Tod Sloan, who, according to a publication in the English Racing Calendar, had been advised to make no application for a license to ride in England next season, reached the four lads while they were still on board the ship, and all were eager to know more about the Sloan case. Lester Reiff was more interested, however, in the news concerning his own case in connection with the running of Richard Croker's horse, Scotchman II., trained by Enoch Wishard, and the Earl of Durham's horse, Gerolstein. The announcement that the Stewards of the Jockey Club had vindicated him, Reiff greeted with pleasure, though he declared that he had expected no other decision. He explained that the different conditions of the races abundantly explained the apparent changes in the form of the horses. Of Sloan's case the elder Reiff said:

"I cannot say that I am surprised, as I had heard rumors of action to be taken concerning Sloan, but at that I think Sloan will have a chance to clear himself if he can have the case reopened. I know nothing about what Sloan is said to have done, but I am sorry he is in trouble, for he made himself very popular among the American riders in England, and, as far as I know, was always within the rules in his riding. As far as the acceptance of presents is concerned, it is a common thing in England, many of the owners making a practice of rewarding their jockeys for any exceptionally good ride. There has been a vast amount of talk in England about the actions of the American jockeys and horsemen, but it is my opinion that most of it is due to the irresponsible chatter of American race-track followers, who circulate stories to further their own ends, and who do not care who they hurt by their wild tales."

Jenkins expressed the opinion that Sloan's present difficulties were in a large measure due to alleged betting operations. He denied any knowledge of Sloan having bet on horses, but said he had heard much of such speculations through gossip, though he felt convinced that much of this was unfounded report, circulated by American "touts," who are as thick on English race courses as they are in America.

Maher had nothing to say beyond the statement that he had been well treated in England. Of the excellent record he has made there he laughingly remarked that he had good horses to ride. "Johnny" Reiff said he was sorry for Sloan, but he had no knowledge of the facts connected with the case. The boy said he was much pleased with his experience abroad, and liked the prospect of going back next season. The Reiffs went to the Hoffman House to remain for a short time before starting to Findlay, Ohio, to visit their family. They will go back to England in March to ride for Enoch Wishard and John Huggins. Maher will visit his relatives in Hartford, Conn., and may go to San Francisco later on to ride at the Winter meeting there before returning to England, where he is under engagement to Pierre Lorillard. Jenkins, who is under contract to ride for Prince Soltykoff in England, expects to spend a part of the Winter in San Francisco.

COTTON.—Business in cotton was much more active and the market ruled decidedly weak under heavy realizing yesterday, chiefly owing to the large amount of cotton coming in sight. The market met with the disadvantage at the outset of weak cables, and opened at a decline of 3@6 points. The market was finally barely steady at a net decline of 13@18 points. The Hester statement was the leading feature of interest in the early dealings. The statistician, the total amount brought into sight this week was 441,131 bales, against 377,041 bales last year, 516,409 bales in 1898, and 495,445 bales in 1897. BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—Frequent and unexpected changes occurred in the wheat market yesterday, making it a difficult affair to follow, although quite satisfactory to the scalping contingent, which dodged in and out all day, entirely indifferent as to whether the general sentiment favored higher prices, as it did earlier in the week, or was now partial to weakness. The Argentine shipments for the week amounted to 312,000 bushels, or only half as large as the week before, and little more than one-third those of a year ago, which fact had an important bearing on our market at the start, furnishing one of the bullish influences. There also was a rally in cables, whereby English markets regained about all of their early loss, and closed partly ¼d higher to ½d lower. The second advice, occurring just at the close, was based on a sudden squeeze of shorts. Quotations of cash wheat, free on board afloat basis, were as follows: No. 1 hard Duluth, 80¼c, nominal; old No. 1 Northern Duluth, 86c; No. 1 Northern Duluth, 84c; No. 1 Northern New York, 81½c; No. 1 Northern Chicago, 81¼c; No. 2 red New York, 78¾c; No. 2 hard, New York, 74½c; December, 156@20c.

Reference is made to the following extracts from a letter addressed to us by MR. THOMAS DOLAN, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED GAS IMPROVEMENT CO., PHILADELPHIA, WHICH CONTROLS THE WESTCHESTER LIGHTING CO.:

"THE TERRITORY COVERED by the Westchester Lighting Company includes all that portion of Westchester County north of the northern limits of the City of New York as far as North Tarrytown and Mount Kisco, including Yonkers, Mamaroneck, New Rochelle, Mount Vernon, Port Chester, Harrison, Rye, North Pelham, Pelham Manor, Pelham Heights, Town of Pelham, Village of Pelham Manor, Village of North Pelham, Village of Pelham, and other lesser municipalities, and includes the old Town of Kingsbridge. The population at present is estimated at 172,000, and was shown by the United States Census of 1890 to have then been about 114,000, a growth of over fifty per cent.

"THE WESTCHESTER LIGHTING COMPANY POSSESSES FRANCHISES extending beyond the date of the maturity of the bonds, and most of the Company's franchises are perpetual.

"THE TOTAL NET EARNINGS of the merged companies amounted, during the year 1899, before consolidation, and under separate management, to $238,103.33, and it is expected that the economies of consolidation as well as increased business due to the extensions and rapidly increasing population in the territory served will result in largely increased net earnings.

"SINCE THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR 1899 THE GAS OUTPUT of the merged companies has increased over 1899 at the rate of twenty per cent., and the electric output at the rate of eleven per cent.

"THE ANNUAL FIXED CHARGES of the Westchester Lighting Company, including interest on the bonds sold to you, amount to $173,710."

STRICKEN FROM STOCK LIST.

Peoria, Decatur and Evansville Second Mortgage Bonds Dropped.

The second mortgage bonds, trust company certificates therefor, and the stock of the Peoria, Decatur and Evansville Road were stricken from the list of the New York Stock Exchange yesterday by order of the Committee on Stock List.

W. H. Granbery, Chairman of the committee, said that such action was taken because the road has been foreclosed on its first mortgage. Distribution is now being made, Mr. Granbery said, to holders of first mortgage bonds, and the road is being operated by the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

When asked whether the present stockholders would be "wiped out," Mr. Granbery said that there might be intangible assets of which he knows nothing.

The order striking the stock from the list was not issued until the close of the day. In the meantime some 4,000 shares had been traded in from the opening hour, at from 1⅞ to 2½, closing at 2⅜, a net change of ¾ of a point. By the action of the Stock Exchange the stock bought yesterday has to-day no apparent market value.

MARKET MOVEMENT.

The stock market yesterday appeared to be influenced by the reported large loss in cash by the banks during the week and by the talk in certain quarters of the probability of higher money rates, if not of an actual stringency. At the same time the reports of the trouble between Portugal and the Netherlands led to some selling in the fear that a war between those countries might involve other powers. Declining prices were generally the order on the Exchange, specialties, such as Tennessee Coal and Iron, United States Rubber, Pacific Mail, and People's Gas being at times heavy and tending to depress the entire list. The standard stocks, however, held well and the close was fairly strong.

The bank statement to be issued to-day is expected to be unfavorable. During the week the banks have lost something like $7,000,000 by reason of shipments to the interior and through Sub-Treasury operations, while at the same time it is generally thought that the loan item will show an increase because of the borrowing in preparation for the January disbursements, and because of such special transactions as the subscription to the $10,000,000 Third Avenue bonds. Money, however, continues easy, and all authoritative testimony is to the effect that it will remain so.

ERIE STOCKS continued strong, and Morgan interests were again credited as purchasers. During the day a statement was published that the company had obtained control of the Pennsylvania Coal Company, and that $490 was paid for the stock. Denials of the report were forthcoming from the officials of both companies.

STEEL STOCKS were irregular, with Tennessee Coal again conspicuous for its weakness, falling below 62. A semi-official statement that the Federal Steel Directors will at the first of the year declare the 5 per cent. dividend on the common stock helped to the strength of that issue.

PEOPLE'S GAS was sold by room traders, but was bought for Chicago account. It was announced during the day from Chicago that the price of fuel gas had been raised from 72 cents to $1 per 1,000 feet in Hyde Park.

PACIFIC MAIL was one of the weak stocks on the list, selling down following the publication of the October statement, showing net earnings of $64, Duty on Bar Association's Books.

The Board of Classification, United States General Appraisers, yesterday affirmed the Collector's decision assessing 25 per cent. ad valorem on a consignment of law books imported for the Bar Association. The importers had protested, claiming free entry under the tariff section relating to public libraries. The board, in its decision, holds that the library in question cannot be classed as a public institution.

An American Bank in Holland.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—An American bank, with a capital of about $8,000,000, of which one-third is paid up, has been organized in Rotterdam, according to Vice Consul General Hanauer, at Frankfort, Germany. The institution has for its aim the advancement of American trade.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Nearly the entire list of active outside securities developed new strength yesterday, and closing prices showed in many cases substantial gains for the day. In some cases the advances were the result of favorable news, but in many others the course of prices was attributable to nothing more specific than an increased demand.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA, which for some time past had been dull as well as weak, developed marked strength, and on active trading both issues advanced to higher prices than any recently recorded. Although the advances were in part the result of what appeared to be efforts to raise the quotations, the demand for the stocks appeared quite large, and both issues closed strong at about the best prices for the day. Trading in each issue totaled about 3,000 shares, and on these transactions the price of the common advanced 1¾ points to 6¾, and the preferred 3 points, to 26. There was no news in regard to the company to account for the gains made.

ELECTRIC BOAT was one of the industrials that became prominent in the late trading. The common stock opened at 20 and sold up to 23 on sales of about 1,500 shares. It closed at 23 bid, showing a net gain of 3¼ points. An even sharper advance occurred in the preferred stock, which, after selling at 40, jumped to 45, and closed at 45 bid. Although no specific news came to hand to account for the strength of these issues, it is understood that negotiations are under way which, if favorably completed, will very materially benefit the Electric Boat Company. Moreover, the fact that Congress is again in session recalls attention to the efforts of the company to secure additional orders from the United States Government.

UNITED RAILWAYS OF ST. LOUIS preferred, which showed much weakness on Thursday, recovered from the low price of that day and closed with a new gain of 2½ points. Transactions in the stocks amounted to only a few hundred shares, and at the end of the day none of the issue was offered. Similar conditions prevailed in the market for St. Louis Transit, which, after selling at 16¾, closed at 17¾ bid, a new gain of 2 points. The bonds were dull and unchanged.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE sold to the extent of 500 shares or more between 18½ and 20. It closed at 19½ bid, a net gain of half a point. Insiders state that the purchase of the Riker Company, which has just been completed, will prove of very great advantage to the Electric Vehicle Company. Although the Electric Vehicle Company has arranged to increase its capital stock by $1,000,000 of common and $1,000,000 of preferred, by no means all of this amount, it is said, will be needed to carry out the purchase, the stock which remained in the treasury of the Electric Vehicle Company before the increase being almost sufficient to acquire the shares of the Riker Company.

THE RICE WILL CHARGES.

Alleged Attempts to Bribe Heirs Under the Second Will Not to Contest the One First Filed.

Statements were given out yesterday by counsel for Albert T. Patrick, who is now confined in the Tombs on the charge of forgery, in which it is claimed that persons directly interested in the first will of William Marsh Rice had been approaching other heirs named in the so-called "Patrick will," and were offering to pay them the full amount of their bequests on condition that they would refrain from contesting that instrument, first filed for probate. Isaac Sargent of the law firm of Logan, Demond & Harby returned yesterday from visiting relatives of the late millionaire at Saranac Lake and Springfield, Mass. He in his public statement declared that the heirs of Mr. Rice had no fault to find with the "Patrick will," and they all said they had been told that they would benefit if they did not contest the first will filed and had been approached several times. Continuing, Mr. Sargent said:

"They all denounce the first will and some of them seem to know why it was drawn and signed by Mr. Rice. I cannot tell you now what that reason is, but it may be later brought out in court.

Mr. Harby of the same firm also made a statement in which he said he had heard that definite arrangements had been made to prevent some of the heirs contesting the first will.

Hornblower, Byrne, Miller & Potter represent William M. Rice, Jr., and others who are interested in the first will. None of the members of this firm would talk about the allegations made by Patrick's counsel further than to say:

"There has been no attempt to buy up any person, and none will be necessary. The second will filed, or the one commonly known as the 'Patrick will,' does not benefit to any great extent any of the heirs of Mr. Rice. Of course, under the peculiar 'secret trust' clause it would be possible for Mr. Patrick to set aside a considerable part if not all of his large interest in that will for the benefit of any heir or heirs he might see fit to give the money to."

REAL ESTATE TRANSFERS.

In the following list "mtg" stands for mortgage and "R S" for revenue stamps. The war revenue law provides that stamps shall be placed on all conveyances at the rate of 50 cents for each $500 of consideration. This "consideration" has been held to mean only the equity above the mortgage, except in the rare cases where the purchaser assumes payment of the mortgage. The amount of the mortgage plus 1 000 times the value of the revenue stamps on the conveyances should therefore show the true consideration:

BROKER MORGAN MAKES A STATEMENT

HOPES TO SETTLE ALL CLAIMS

Says He Met All Contracts Up to Time of Seizure of Books—McKenzie Gives Bail.

C. W. Morgan of the firm of C. W. Morgan & Co., who made an assignment after his arrest on complaint of customers, gave out the following statement last night:

New York, Dec. 7, 1900.

My place of business was seized and my books and papers taken away on complaint of William D. Bailey, who admitted in court that he had never made a complaint to me, and had never made a demand upon me that had not been complied with at once. All my contracts on the Exchange, up to and including the day of seizure, were fully met. Being unable to continue business by reason of the seizure and detention of my books, I made an assignment to protect my creditors from any preferences, by suit or otherwise. This assignment was to a lawyer of standing, with whom I had no previous business or social connection. He has, I understand, retained his own counsel and will, I believe, act for the interests of all creditors alike. I hope and expect, as soon as my books and papers can be obtained, and my affairs straightened out, to settle with all who have just claims against me to their satisfaction.

I do not know the motives of the complaint, or of those at whose instance he may be acting. This complaint was made, however, I am informed, shortly after I had caused the arrest of the proprietors of a Wall Street paper, published at irregular intervals, who had attempted to extort money from me by threatening to publish an untrue article in that paper.

It is impossible in the space of a letter to deny specifically the many untrue statements that have been published. Appeal has been made to the courts where these loose statements can be properly sifted and disproved and my defense established under oath. Until that time, I beg the public to at least suspend judgment.

C. W. MORGAN.

John B. McKenzie, who is alleged to have been connected with the "discretionary" stock brokerage firm of Charles W. Morgan & Co., and who is now under bonds to answer a charge of grand larceny and conspiracy, was yesterday in technical custody for a few minutes. He surrendered himself at the Centre Street Police Court, furnished $10,000 cash bail for himself and Claude Watson Turner, who was arrested on Wednesday, and they are free until next Thursday, when they will appear before Magistrate Zeller at the Jefferson Market Police Court. Lewis C. Van Riper, another alleged member of the "combine," will, it is said, surrender to-day.

It is asserted that Turner has given information of value to the officials, and that he will be used as a witness for the people.

Assignee Hanson has already come into possession of assets of some importance. Chief Detective McClusky has turned over to him securities, checks, and notes amounting to about $10,000, which were seized at Morgan's offices.

No action has been taken by the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange on Morgan's insolvency, which has not been officially announced to its members. President Wagar says that no stigma attaches to Brokers W. R. Whitner and D. B. Mumford, who executed orders for Morgan.

The surrender of McKenzie was arranged with the District Attorney's office by C. W. Zaring, once an Assistant District Attorney, who is also counsel for Van Riper and was counsel for C. B. Lawrence. In the early afternoon a telephone message from Mr. Zaring announced that McKenzie had arranged for bail for himself and Turner and was starting for the Centre Street Court, where Magistrate Flammer was sitting. Detective McConville met him there and placed him under arrest. Mr. Zaring produced certificates from the City Chamberlain that May McKenzie, wife of the accused, had deposited cash bail in $10,000 for her husband and Turner, and McKenzie was free to go when he had signed the formal papers. In them he said he was thirty years old, a native of Michigan, and a speculator, and that he lived at 251 West Eighty-first Street. He and his counsel were solicitous about Turner.

When he was brought from the Tombs Prison he did not appear to be in good humor. The lawyer hailed him with, "Well, this is the best we could do for you," and Turner, who is short and boyish looking replied, "Oh, that's all right." Turner gave his pedigree as "age, twenty-six, native of Ohio, advertisement writer, lives at Highwood, N. J." Mr. Zaring advised his clients to make no statement, and they went away with him, and Mrs. McKenzie, an anxious-looking little woman who was richly garbed.

Morgan's books were taken to the office of Assistant District Attorney Byrne, where Assignee Hanson will examine them. Mr. Hanson laughed yesterday at a story that Morgan had $100,000 to his credit at the Seaboard National Bank.

"It's a small sum," he said, "but I will not give the amount. I have already secured some assets for the creditors. I do not yet know if the assignors had any realty."

Mr. Hanson has received from Chief Detective McClusky about $10,000 in securities, checks, and notes, seized in Morgan's offices. The securities were two shares Oregon Transcontinental Company, ten shares Chicago Great Western, twenty shares United States Leather, and one certificate, $40, American Spirits Manufacturing Company, scrip.

President Wagar of the Consolidated Exchange said that no announcement of insolvency had been received from Morgan, so that no official declaration of it had been made on the Exchange. He added that Brokers Whitner and Mumford were fully justified in executing orders from Morgan on the floor. Mr. Mumford said that he simply received orders from Morgan and executed them as a broker.

The officials would not discuss the story that Turner is to turn State's evidence.

Lawyer Zaring announced last night that Van Riper would to-day secure bail and surrender himself.

"I have not," said H. B. Johnson of Niles & Johnson, "seen my client, Mr. Morgan, to-day. I suppose that he is not yet ready to make a statement to the public."

The Mitchell Vance Company yesterday filed a mechanic's lien against 627 West End Avenue, the house of Charles W. and Mae Morgan, for $686 25, for chandeliers, brackets, and labor.

James Fish Hooker has been assigned to act with Assistant District Attorney Byrne in the prosecution.

JOHN S. SILVER AGAIN IN COURT.

John S. Silver was arraigned in the Centre Street Court yesterday charged by Howard J. Barlow of 27 West Ninety-eighth Street with the larceny of $580.84. Barlow alleges that he gave at various times to Silver more than $500 to be invested by the latter in Atchison stock. Demands for a statement of his account or a return for his money, he claims, were unavailing.

Silver said in court that he was conducting a railroad investment office at 32 Broadway, and that he was not engaged in a stock brokerage business. Persons who wished to get advice concerning gilt-edged securities, for investment purposes, he said, could come to his office and be accommodated. Barlow's money, he said, had been invested by the brokers of a friend of his, and that he was ignorant of the firm's name. Barlow claimed that his agreement with Silver was that the latter was to share the profits and make good all losses. Mrs. Barlow corroborated her husband's testimony.

John S. Silver, who has in his day achieved much notoriety, is said to have started his business career in Stonington, Conn., forty-four years ago. He is often remembered in connection with a loan of $50,000 made him and Francis C. Grable by Cashier William J. Quinlan of the Chemical National Bank in 1898 on securities which were afterward pronounced worthless by President Williams. Cashier Quinlan resigned as a consequence of his affair. At the time of the failure of the Third National Bank, later, Silver's name appeared on the debit side of the books to the extent of $35,000. When the American Loan and Trust Company went under Silver, a Director, owed it $175,000, and $78,000 of the funds of the Washington National Bank had passed into his possession when it suspended business in 1891.

John J. Cahill obtained a judgment against him for $50,000 in May last. After the Cahill matter, Silver dropped out of sight until about a month ago, when Columbus Avenue merchants made many complaints to the police that a man named Silver was obtaining goods and money from them upon worthless checks and false representations. It was the same

John S. Silver, and in the West Side Court, upon complaint of a druggist named Buch of 78 West Ninety-eighth Street, he was held for the Grand Jury. This complaint was dismissed a few days ago, it is said, the complainant not wishing to prosecute further.

In default of $1,000 bail, Silver was committed to the Tombs by Magistrate Zeller on the Barlow charge.

At 32 Broadway, where Silver claimed to have an office, the janitor said: "We put that man out of here seven months ago. Why did we do it? Well, people began to talk about him, and we thought it better to get rid of him."

COOK DEFIED THE FAMILY.

Barricaded Herself in the Kitchen—Made Prisoner by Policemen.

"I'm monarch of all I survey."

This was the defiant challenge hurled over the transom by the cook in the Alfred G. Sonn family of 371 West Sixteenth Street yesterday when the family walked into the dining room for breakfast.

Mr. Sonn, who claimed to know about cooks, recently went to an employment agency and engaged the services of Catharine Alldig. All went well for a few days, and Mr. Sonn was beginning to boast. Then the storm broke.

When the family entered the dining room yesterday they found that room deserted. Mr. Sonn called to the cook, and, getting no answer, made a movement toward the kitchen. He got no further than the door, which was barricaded. Peering over the transom was the cook, and her bold challenge seemed directed particularly toward the head of the family.

Mr. Sonn sent for a policeman, and Patrolman Gorman of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station came. The cook treated the policeman's peace overtures with scorn. Then a patrol wagon and three other policemen came, and a combined assault was made on the barricade. It was finally carried, and the cook and the policemen fought all the way down the stairs of the apartment house. The cook was later committed to Bellevue Hospital to be examined as to her sanity.

JAMES E. CAMPBELL'S AFFAIRS.

Ex-Governor Applies to Have Hoffman House Judgment Set Aside.

Ex-Gov. James E. Campbell of Ohio made application in the City Court yesterday to have the judgment for $1,359 obtained against him by the Hoffman House Company set aside. He claims that the understanding supposed to have existed between himself and the counsel for the hotel was not carried out, and as a result the judgment was entered by default when as a matter of fact he had a defense to at least a portion of the claim.

The ex-Governor, when seen yesterday at his office, in the Equitable Building, said: "I have not failed in business. It is true that I, like many others, have legacies in the way of debts as a result of the panic of 1893, but I have been paying off these debts, and none of those remaining is pressing me. The claims cited in some of the papers as still being against me were paid five or six years ago."

Concerning the advertisement inserted in a paper early in the week by a lawyer who wanted to know Mr. Campbell's whereabouts, and who told reporters that he had a fifty-dollar check issued by Mr. Campbell which had gone to protest, Mr. Campbell said that as soon as he learned of it he sent a messenger to the lawyer's office and informed him where he could be found. The lawyer thereupon visited Mr. Campbell, who demanded the check. The lawyer told him that it was in possession of a client of his, and that he had only heard it had been protested. When the check was finally produced Mr. Campbell promptly paid it.

CHIEF DEVERY'S CALLER.

A Dignified Man Wants to Re-enter the "Swim"—Now in Bellevue.

A tall, dignified, well-dressed man called upon Chief Devery, at Police Headquarters, yesterday and, after introducing himself as William Horsman of 230 East Twenty-second Street, threw a paper down on the Chief's desk. On the paper was written:

"Full claim $25,000,000. Will compromise for $5,000,000."

"What does this mean?" asked the Chief.

"This will explain," replied Horsman, producing from a bundle of documents a letter addressed to the Chief of Police and signed by Horsman.

The paper set forth briefly that the writer was termed an "outsider" by a secret organization called the "Swim." The writer went on to say that he was supposed to be "dead to the world" by this same organization, and had been left to his own resources to learn the reason why.

"I trust you to kindly enlighten me under the circumstances," the letter went on to say, "knowing you to have a knowledge of such matters, they being in your line. If it is necessary to be enrolled on the list of members to be in the so-called 'Swim,' I shall be most happy to comply."

The Chief sent for Detective Daly and sent him with the caller to the Jefferson Market Police Court. On the way to court Horsman promised to give Daly $5,000,000 as soon as a settlement of the $25,000,000 claim could be effected. He was committed to Bellevue Hospital to be examined as to his sanity. As he was being led to the pavilion he exclaimed:

At the East Twenty-second Street address it was learned that Horsman had boarded there for five years. He was employed as a carriage maker in the factory of the Bruce Carriage Company. Horsman's landlady said that he had gone out to get his laundry early yesterday and that was the last she had seen of him.

Decree Against Strong Executors.

A final decree, was issued yesterday by Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court, directing Putnam Bradlee Strong and Albert R. Shattuck, executors of the estate of William L. Strong, to deliver to Mrs. Eliza T. Griswold of Philadelphia certain securities which ex-Mayor Strong, acting as agent, had purchased for her. It is understood that there was no disposition on the part of the executors to hinder Mrs. Griswold in obtaining her securities.

TWO MEN ASPHYXIATED.

Are Supposed to be Brothers and Were Found Dead in a West Street Hotel.

Two men, supposed to be brothers and thought to be George and William Miller of Marlborough, Ulster County, N. Y., were found asphyxiated by gas in a small room on the second floor of the Boston and Fall River Hotel, 210 West Street, yesterday morning. Both men were well dressed, had money, and seemed to be countrymen.

The men hired the room Thursday night about 8 o'clock from S. Vogel, the proprietor of the hotel. Both men were perfectly sober, and retired to the room, coming down only once to borrow a pack of cards from the proprietor to play euchre. At 9 o'clock yesterday morning Vogel went to the room to wake the men, as they had left orders to be called at that hour, saying they wished to take a boat to go home. Vogel smelled gas on nearing the room. He ran into the street and called a policeman from the Leonard Street Station. The men went to the rear of the house and raised a ladder against the window of the men's room. Both men were dead. One of them was lying on the floor, with his head toward the door; the other was lying in bed.

The Coroners' office was notified at once. Investigation showed a gas jet in the room partly turned on. Two packages of money, containing $24.00 and $88.70, respectively, were found, besides two letters. One of these was a letter recommending William Miller as a competent gardener, and was addressed to George Miller, Milton, Ulster County, N. Y. The other was addressed to William Miller, and was a letter from the dead man's brother, in the Philippines.

The envelope containing the recommendation had printed in one corner the name "Terry, 1,230 Johnston Street, Newburg, N. Y." At the Coroners' Office it was said that the case was undoubtedly one of accidental asphyxiation.

WOMAN FOUND ABLAZE.

Her Groans Attract Attention—Not Accidental, Another Woman Says.

Several pedestrians passing the saloon at 1 Forsyth Street early yesterday morning were startled by the sound of woman's screams coming from the hall within. Rushing in, they found a woman rolling about on the floor with her clothing in flames. The burning clothing was torn from the woman's body, and she was taken, unconscious, to Gouverneur Hospital, where it was said that she would die. She was identified as Lizzie Kelley, twenty-two years old, no home.

The police, after an investigation, said that the woman had been asleep in the hall, but a woman who keeps a saloon near by insisted that the woman entered the hall with two men a short time previous, all three intoxicated, and that one of the men set the woman's clothing on fire.

MAIL WAGON DEMOLISHED.

Run Into by Trolley and Two Persons Badly Injured.

A mail wagon, with a cargo consisting principally of registered letters, was demolished shortly after midnight yesterday morning by a Third Avenue trolley car. The driver of the wagon was hurled from his seat and received injuries which sent him to the hospital, while one woman passenger in the car was seriously injured.

The mail wagon had just left the branch Post Office on Forty-fourth Street, in charge of Driver Michael Demuth, and had swung into Third Avenue on its way to the General Post Office, when one of the cars of the Third Avenue line came swiftly up behind. The buffer struck the wagon with a crash, smashing its wheels and throwing it over against the elevated railroad pillar. Demuth was picked up twenty feet from the scene.

Every pane of glass in the car was smashed. One of the passengers, Mrs. Hannah Josephson of 263 West Thirty-eighth Street, was standing up in the car when the crash came. The force of the impact threw her down with great violence. An ambulance was hurried to the scene from Flower Hospital and the surgeon found that Demuth was suffering from serious internal injuries. Mrs. Josephson had also received internal injuries. Both were removed to the hospital. Motorman Schaeffer was locked up.

MRS. WELTON C. PERCY DIVORCED

Wife of the Lawyer and Politician Secures an Absolute Decree.

A decree of absolute divorce was granted yesterday to Mary C. Percy by Justice Lawrence in the Supreme Court. The husband from whom the decree separates her is Welton C. Percy, a lawyer and politician. When Mr. Percy was in the Assembly in 1895 he introduced the Percy-Gray Racing bill, which put horse racing practically under State jurisdiction. Previous to his election from the Nineteenth Assembly District he was an Assistant Attorney General of the State.

The papers in the divorce case were sealed and all that was made public was the decree. This shows that the couple were married in 1892. Mrs. Percy was a daughter of the late Dr. A. H. Cruttenden of Bath, N. Y., and her brother was the late William Marcus Cruttenden, who for seven years was the associate editor of The Buffalo Evening News.

Topics of the Week.

One of the most elegant books of the season will, unfortunately, not be presented until January. It is entitled, "A Descriptive and Historical Catalogue of the Collection of Pictures and Sculpture at Apsley House, London," which, as everybody knows, was a residence of the Duke of Wellington. The author is Evelyn Duchess of Wellington. It will be illustrated by 82 photo engravings, especially executed for them by Messrs. Goupil & Co. of Paris and will be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. of London.

volumes, royal quarto in size. The edition will consist of 400 copies, of which only a few will be at the disposal of Longmans, Green & Co. for American collectors. No expense and pains have been spared, we are told, to make the book a fine specimen of the bookbuilder's art, in which the finest work of the printer, the engraver, the papermaker, and the binder have been united.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have in preparation a historical work which treats of a very old subject, scattered broadcast in American histories, something after the plan of a monograph. It is entitled "Spanish Settlements Within the Present Limits of the United States," by Woodbury Lowery. It shows that prior to the Treaty of Ryswick in 1697, Spain had nominal possession of most of the land now occupied by the United States, and that the English settlers on the New England coast, the French in the St. Lawrence basin, and the Dutch in New Amsterdam were practically interlopers, whom Spain could legally have driven from the country had she only possessed the power to maintain her rights.

A new novel by Albert Kinross, author of "An Opera and Lady Grasmere," will be presented before long by the Frederick A. Stokes Company, and is said to be the longest and most important work that this author has yet written. The book will appear simultaneously through the American house mentioned, through Arrowsmith, in England, and Tauchnitz, in Germany. It is entitled "Philbrick Howell," and is said to represent six years of conscientious, almost constant labor.

The vogue of publishing the love letters of great men seems to be spreading. As we have already noted, there are the Brownings' Victor Hugo's, and Bismarck's in English translations, with the possibility that Goethe's will shortly be added to the list. And now we are promised an English translation of the love letters of Balzac, which were recently published in book form in France. This, of course, is the famous correspondence between Balzac and a Polish lady, Mme. Hanska, who became his wife only a few weeks before his death. The whole affair might be called a romance of the post, for it began by a letter sent by Mme. Hanska, who was a complete stranger to the author. He replied to it, and so a correspondence began, which led to the meeting of the two and their eventual marriage.

The same liberties of translation have been allowed Mr. Ernest Vizetelly in regard to "Work" which were accorded the translator in rendering the first of this new series, "Fécondité," into English. M. Zola quite appreciates the difference between English-American and French points of view for fiction, and having absolute faith in the practical as well as the artistic judgment of Mr. Vizetelly, he gives him a free hand. The book will be published some time in February, the translation by Messrs. Chatto in London. We presume that an American edition will appear from Doubleday, Page & Co., who secured the American rights to "Fécondité."

"In the Early Forties," being a series of papers of literary recollections, by George M. Smith of the London publishing house of Smith & Elder, will begin as a serial in the January number of The Critic. Most of the great lights that illuminated the pages of English literature during the middle part of the century, and later, too, for that matter, patronized this house or were patronized by it. Its name is conspicuously identified with those of Thackeray, Dickens, and Charlotte Brontë.

W. S. Childe-Pemberton's "The Baroness de Bode, 1775-1803" is just off the press of Longmans, Green & Co. It is illustrated with tinted portraits, and is said to be a most fascinating book of chronicles, which, by careful editing, appears in the light and with the scope of memoirs. It is the story of the strange experiences of an English lady, wife of a German Baron, living in Alsace. The French Revolution leaves its impressions upon the writer at close and short range, and then are recounted the adventures of an émigré in Russia.

The literary event of the month is the publication in the Christmas number of McClure's Magazine of the opening chapters of Rudyard Kipling's long novel of Indian life. It is entitled "Kim." Kim is a white boy, born of British parents, who finds himself immersed in the native society in Lahore; hither comes an aged Lama from Thibet, seeking the magic river, which was supposed to have sprung from the ground where Buddha's arrow fell. Together they set out to find it. In Kim is blended all the matter-of-fact ways of his race with a craving in his heart that the mysticism which enfolds him may be true. So far the story appears to be an extraordinary human document of native life in India.

JOHN MORLEY'S "CROMWELL."

Reviewed for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW
By Joseph Jacobs,
Formerly Editor of The English Jewish Year Book.

Cromwell is one of the riddles of history. Of few men of prominence is it more difficult to get anything like a clear view. On the battlefield decisive and prompt, in the Council Chamber tortuous and delaying decisions until the last moment, at times as clear in his language as Bunyon or Defoe, on most occasions as confused and muddy as any of the contemporary divines, tender-hearted yet brutal, a pioneer of toleration yet fanatically intolerant against Papacy—Cromwell is a mass of contradictions to which no one yet has found adequate solution. By the aid of Prof. Gardiner and Mr. Firth, it is possible, indeed, to understand his surroundings, to comprehend the problems with which he had to deal, and the possible solutions which in most cases enable us to understand why Cromwell was forced to adopt one or the other. But it still remains unclear why Cromwell became the foremost figure of the Commonwealth, and why not Fairfax or Ireton, or Bradshaw.

Mr. Morley's monograph will scarcely aid to solve this puzzle. Indeed, it is one of its merits that it brings the difficulty out more prominently than any of the memoirs that have been produced during the recent Cromwell "boom." Mr. Morley points out that in most of the decisive events which led up to King Charles's death Cromwell followed rather than led. It is generally forgotten that up to June, 1650, (that is, eighteen months after the King's death,) the Commander in Chief of the Parliamentary army was Lord Fairfax. Up to that time the leadership in the councils of the party had been taken successively by Pym, Ireton, and Bradshaw. Mr. Morley's narrative renders it clear that it was as the Great Unionist that Cromwell gained his position after the death of the King by preventing Ireland and Scotland from breaking away from the Commonwealth. Cromwell saved it for the time, yet when he had saved it he proved unable to build up the Commonwealth on permanent lines. Again and again he had to fall back upon the power of the sword to solve the problems which were eminently civic and constitutional. His most celebrated saying, "Take away that bauble," was a confession that he had failed as a civil ruler. Hitherto it has been assumed that, while a comparative failure at home, Cromwell was eminently successful abroad, and that his foreign policy initiated anew the expansion of England. My old teacher, Sir John Seeley, placed him, indeed, by the side of Elizabeth and William III. as one of the builders of Great Britain, but Mr. Morley reduces Cromwell's pretensions in this regard to a mere following out of the traditional policy of the English Foreign Office of the time. Cromwell's own contribution to England's foreign policy was a conception of a great European Protestant alliance, which only resulted in a war with Protestant Holland.

In Mr. Morley's very judicial summing up he even goes further and denies to Cromwell any prominent influence in the final shaping of British institutions. On Church government he had no influence. The British Parliament took a form opposed to his own conception of its functions. Even with regard to toleration, Cromwell's chief claim as a civil ruler, (though this was the policy of the independent party rather than any personal one,) English policy was determined ultimately by Locke and the Rationalists. Altogether no one can accuse Mr. Morley of hero-worship in his account of Cromwell; indeed, he rather speaks in the terms of an avvocato del diavolo.

In fact, Mr. Morley is the last person one would have thought to have taken a sympathetic interest in Cromwell. As he himself has brought out most clearly, Cromwell was the arch-Unionist of his time, with the determination that England should have the deciding voice in the destinies of the British Isles. Mr. Morley's own political tendencies have scarcely been in this direction. Again, Cromwell was almost the earliest of the imperialists among English rulers. He was almost the first to seek for expansion abroad, both on the Continent (Dunkirk) and in the New World (Jamaica,) yet Mr. Morley is almost the typical anti-imperialist of our times. Further, Cromwell was always prepared to submit matters to the arbitrament of the sword, a method to which Mr. Morley is almost fanatically opposed. Mr. Morley has always stood for opposition to the movement represented by Carlyle, and it was Carlyle that recreated Cromwell for the modern Anglo-Saxon world. That the former editor of The Fortnightly Review is not in sympathy with any of the religious ideals which animated England in the seventeenth century it is scarcely necessary to add, yet Mr. Morley is perhaps most sympathetic in dealing with the Puritan strain of Cromwell.

Having in view this want of sympathy with his hero, Mr. Morley's monograph is more successful than might have been anticipated in giving a clear view of

Cromwell's aims and career. He at any rate brings out more clearly than any previous writer the essentially military character of Cromwell's success. It was as a superb cavalry leader that he gained his supreme position with the army, and whenever a Constitution is upset, the power falls almost automatically to the army leader of the time, as witness Cæsar and Napoleon. If Frederick the Great had taken poison at the lowest stage of his fortune, von Zeidlitz might have been put into supreme power in Prussia, and Cromwell was the von Zeidlitz of his time. That is the conclusion to which Mr. Morley's delineation leads us. On the Parliamentary intrigues of Cromwell's time he is less instructive: That would require a profounder acquaintance with the sources than Mr. Morley can claim to possess, and he has wisely refrained from a field which such masters as Prof. Gardiner and Mr. Firth have already occupied. On the whole, Mr. Morley has succeeded in giving a saner view of Cromwell's position than any of his recent eulogists, though it cannot be said that this monograph ranks with those on the precursors of the French Revolution, in which Mr. Morley first obtained fame as a littérateur. The want of sympathy may perhaps explain the want of success.

It has been natural to regard this book in direct relation with Mr. Morley's own personality, since it marks his first appearance as an author since he entered active politics over fifteen years ago. One was curious to observe whether intercourse with active life and experience in public speaking had interfered with Mr. Morley's literary capacity. On the whole there is the same power of associating individual action with general world movements, the same rather sombre enthusiasm which at times gives rhythm to his sentences. The insight into practical life appears clearer, and it is somewhat amusing to find the former uncompromising opponent of compromise recognize its necessity in the every-day life of the politician. Before parting from Mr. Morley's monograph, a word should be said on the excellence of the publisher's part in the book, which includes quite a gallery of portraits of all the notables of the civil war period. These have been selected from the very best sources, and on the whole are admirably reproduced.

Mr. Patterson's sketch of Cromwell's life and character is a modest and straightforward presentation of the facts of the case derived from the ordinary sources which could scarcely claim rivalry with either Mr. Firth or Mr. Morley. It is frankly an éloge, and does not attempt any solution of the intricacies of the Cromwellian problem. Altogether it cannot be included among the books which must be regarded as necessary. JOSEPH JACOBS.

French "Pomes" to Krueger.

From The London Pall Mall Gazette.

PARIS, Nov. 19.—The gutter poets, of whom it is the profession to perpetrate doggerel records of passing events, have, of course, been inspired by the coming of Mr. Krüger. At the Montmartre Fair, which is in full swing on the other boulevards, I purchased on Saturday evening a baker's dozen of Krüger songs, which were being squeaked to considerable audiences by wheezy itinerant minstrels. The listeners at these pavement concerts are seldom or ever demonstrative. They show their satisfaction by buying the song and joining in very serious fashion in the chorus. I saw no exhibition of pro-Boer enthusiasm, but only the familiar spectacle of the music-loving crowd that follows with the same attention some political incubration or a lament on the latest murder. One of the songsters I listened to alternated his Krüger effusion with another on the Dax railway catastrophe, and to both his efforts was accorded an identical reception.

The songs, ill-printed on paper a grocer would despise, cost a sou apiece, and are dear at the price. Mr. Krüger as a muse cannot be regarded as a success. So far as I have been able to discover, he has inspired the street rhymsters with drivel a little more egregious even than that in which they are wont to indulge. One quotation will do as well as another; all the songs are on the same dead level of inanity. Here is a verse from a piece entitled "A Salute to the Heroic Boers":

> Malgré leurs mensonges, leurs fables,
> Malgré toutes leurs annexions,
> Vos paysans, si redoutables,
> Vaincront ces soldats de salons • • •

Another "Salute" explains that if France has not flown to the rescue of the Transvaal, it is the fault of the unchivalrous German:

> Or, l'Allemand, dont l'ame n'est pas fiere,
> Profiterait qu'on vole a ton secours
> Pour envahir a l'Est la frontiere
> Ou nos soldats doivent veiller toujours.

But the manufacturers of doggerel ditties are not the only persons who are trying to turn an honest penny with the aid of Mr. Krüger. The workshops of Belleville and the Marais are producing Krüger souvenirs in great quantities. Nothing particularly ingenious, however, seems to have been devised up to the present. Little is to be met with beyond the effigy of Mr. Krüger in a score of different forms on studs, brooches, paper weights, and a multitude of other objects. The artists never omit either the Presidential top hat or the Presidential pipe. The hawkers are also selling a Krüger toy in the shape of a miniature boat, which is supposed to represent the Gelderland. There are no Transvaal flags to be seen in the streets yet, but I am told that they are being manufactured in great quantities, and will be on the market in a day or two.

HOLIDAY BOOKS.

INTRODUCTION: CHRISTMAS IN SONG AND STORY.

Unlike many other holidays, Christmas has no merely local or national signification. Nor is its celebration a modern custom, for which reason the literature of many lands, for a period of time covering centuries, will be found to be full of references to it, its celebration, and the many quaint customs centring around its observance. Germany, with its Christ-Kind and universal Christmas tree, is without doubt the one land where the day is most universally celebrated, a very pretty custom pertaining to its observance being the sending of a miniature Christmas tree, candles and all, the whole being only a few inches in height, to carry the good wishes of the season to the son, daughter, or other relative in a foreign land. The diaries and letters of Americans resident in Germany at this season give charming pictures of the festivities reigning everywhere, and of the cordial fashion in which strangers are invited to join the family circle at this time.

In Washington Irving's "Sketch Book" will be found papers, which, all things considered, give the best pictures of a real old-fashioned Christmas in Merrie England. These essays are "Christmas Eve," "Christmas Day," and "The Christmas Dinner." In them the gathering at the old hall is described, the whole atmosphere of the papers being saturated with the Christmas spirit, and containing fascinating accounts not only of the feasting, but of the sports and other customs—the bowl of frumenty eaten on Christmas eve, wheaten biscuit boiled in milk and highly spiced, which is one of the season's special dishes, eaten with the great wax tapers called Christmas candles burning, the carols, the Yule log, and the passing of the wassail bowl—all the more interesting in that many of the customs depicted have long since passed away.

Dickens's Christmas books, and especially the "Cricket on the Hearth," have a new significance at this season, while a glance over Thackeray's Christmas books will result in reading here a page, there, perhaps, only a paragraph, with such pleasure and zest that there seems no doubt as to the place [illegible] ways fill in Christmas lit[illegible] there are many who will a[illegible] Mabie that Alexander Smith's beautiful essay on Christmas included in his "Dreamthorp" is one of the most charming treatments of the day in our language, Mr. Mabie's own chapter upon this, the greatest day in the year, which is included in "My Study Fire," is almost worthy to stand beside "Dreamthorp."

Among the best of the many beautiful short Christmas stories will be found some whose charm is heightened by their scenes being laid in far countries, where many quaint customs are observed, as in Australia, with flowers in bloom everywhere and hot skies overhead, and the lightest of clothing worn, which in some way seems to take away the Christmas feeling. Douglas Sladen, indeed, in one of his poems, a Christmas letter from Australia, says, "It is not quite a Christmas here, with this unclouded sky," and yet he adds that as budding roses do not bring June, so cold winds do not necessarily mean Christmas. "Kind hearts make Christmas, June can bring blue sky or clouds above."

The novelist, essayist, and short story writer have found in Christmas a prolific theme, and many a pathetic story comes to mind where the struggles of some poor mother to provide her children with small remembrances of the day have been crowned by the loving forethought of a friend or an acquaintance or merely a looker-on. For one of the most pleasing aspects of the Christmas season is the feeling of love and charity toward all men, which we want to manifest by giving some small token of remembrance to all we know or meet. It is the one time in all the year when most of us feel it is literally more blessed to give than to receive, although we do receive a heavy recompense in the feeling of satisfaction engendered by making others happy.

The very streets assume a festive aspect as at no other time; Christmas trees, holly, and mistletoe are outside all the shops. The crowds are good-natured, and as the day approaches we fairly revel in the street stands which contain the ornaments for many a humble tree, cheap toys, candies, fruits, finding, too, great interest in the crowds that surround them, while to carry bundles at this one season of the year is not only eminently proper, but in some way the badge of respectability.

Poets seem not to have written so freely of the joys of Christmas as have prose writers. Bennett has written a beautiful Christmas song, in which a wife begs the wind to blow shrilly and loud, and sing in her sailor's ear her desire to have him return for the Christmas that comes so near, "Hurry him home, kind sail." Alfred Dommett has written a beautiful Christmas hymn, referring to the first Christmas, while the Rev. John White Chadwick's "His Mother's Joy," expresses most beautifully the religious side of the day:

> Little, I ween, did Mary guess,
> As on her arm her baby lay,
> What tides of joy would swell and beat,
> Through ages long on Christmas Day, while Robert Collyer tells in verse a beautiful tale of Christmas Eve in the wildest Winter ever known, "the year 14," when a young lover who was to wed at New Year's started to drive across the hills, contrary to advice, to visit her he loved, and how Ruth, suddenly feeling that her lover was lost in the drifts, sprang from her home, followed by others with lanterns, who found "her there holding him still and white," but it is good to read that it was not death, although so near, and when the teller of the tale is questioned as to how Ruth knew of her lover's peril, we find him simply saying, "Nay, lads, we never can know."

Dr. Holland, who has given us the best long poem on Thanksgiving, "Bitter Sweet," which in one family of our acquaintance is regularly read aloud, at least in part, on every return of the day—a custom which dates from the poem's first appearance—has also written a beautiful Christmas carol, "There's a song in the air! There's a star in the sky!" while William Gordon McCabe's "Christmas Night of '62" gives a beautiful account of that night in camp—with groups of soldiers clustering around the fires, talking of other Christmas days and of home; knowing that in those homes their people are praying that they may be brought safely home again.

Stevenson's beautiful little Christmas Sermon is without doubt one of the most delightful short essays in our language, while Eugene Field has treated Christmas in as many different phases as the many-sidedness of his nature would suggest, from the tender cradle songs and other beautiful Christmas poems to his immortal "Jes' 'Fore Christmas," wherein he pictures the condition of many a child the world over:

> Most all the time the hull year roun' there > ain't no flies on me,
> But jes' 'fore Christmas I'm as good as I > kin be!

FIFTY YEARS OF CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

Looking over a private library recently which contains the collection of three generations, I was much struck by the remarkable change that has taken place in the character of Christmas books during the latter half of the nineteenth century. In the 1850 decade the most popular style of holiday books was of the kind which a competent critic of the time described as "the gaudy annuals, with their wretched engravings and silly letterpress," and he goes on to say, "The interest of the annuals was confined mainly to their showy covers and fine white paper—not likely to be lasting—while that of the better class of books arises from their contents, and is perennial."

The description of one of those "gaudy annuals" will cover an entire shelf of such books. Here is one called "The Keepsake of Friendship: A Christmas and New Year's Annual for 1851," edited by G. S. Munroe. This precious volume is bound in full morocco, with gilt edges, and a profusion of gold on back and front. Unlike "The Queen's Daughter," the beauty of this book is on the outside. Opening it, I found an elaborate but tasteless title page lithographed in startling colors, with the name in gold, red, and blue. The letterpress was made up of prose and poetry, the latter in about the same proportion as Falstaff's immortal onze of bread to his "infinite deal of sack." Of the thirty-five contributors, Mrs. Hemans and Martin F. Tupper are the only persons whose names are at all known to the present generation. The volume is embellished with six engravings, which are worthy companions of the letterpress. This is a sample, and not a bad sample, of the Christmas literature of our grandparents' old age and of our parents' youth.

There was a bewildering array of those once showy but long since sadly faded annuals. These names are enough: "The Leaflets of Memory," "The Gem of the Season," "The Winter Wreath," &c., all royal 8vo and "elegantly" illustrated. Here is a set of 12mos: "Memory's Gift," "The Gem Annual," "The Passion Flower," "The Philopoena," &c., beautifully bound in antique morocco, with illuminated covers. When I opened those Christmas books and noted their namby-pamby contents I was full of sympathy for the gentle dames who were the recipients of such gifts.

The flush times which followed the civil war brought a great change in the character of our literary tastes. Our luxury in literature kept pace with our luxury in every other respect. The annuals which I have described disappeared and were found only in second-hand book stores and in private libraries. They are now among the "Curiosities of Literature"—worthless as literature, but precious as curios. Beautiful editions of standard American and English authors were offered as Christmas books at high prices. I mention Irving's "Sketch Book," with 120 illustrations, by the most eminent artists, richly bound; Poe's Poems, illustrated by Tenniel, Birket Foster, and other well-known artists; "The Raven," illustrated by Gustave Doré, a folio, illuminated cloth, with gilt edges; a superb edition of Shakespeare, half morocco, twenty volumes, a gift worthy of a prince or an American millionaire; the "Waverley Novels," half morocco, forty-eight volumes. These and other luxurious Christmas books that might be mentioned would astonish our parents and grandparents could they see them. The genius of the artist and the poet combine to produce books so sumptuous that their most appropriate place would seem to be the private libraries of Princes. But they are not too elegant or too costly for the taste and the purse of American railroad magnates, petroleum kings, merchant princes, and coal barons.

Many persons buy books at Christmas who buy them at no other time. In this way books of the highest literary and artistic value are collected by persons who are not collectors in the ordinary sense. The Christmas books most in demand are not new books, but new editions of standard books. Not only are the complete works of famous authors sold as Christmas books, but separate works; for instance, "Ivanhoe," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Alhambra," &c., are favorite gift books at this season of the year. These are made more attractive and extended by the introduction of numerous elegant engravings.

When I recall my own childhood and the joyous anticipation of the happy Christmas time, I cannot help contrasting the meagre supply of Christmas books which the children of my generation had with the bewildering display of juvenile literature that now meets the eye in every well-appointed book store. Travels and adventures, sea stories and land stories, historical stories and home stories, books about animals, books about birds, books about everything under the sun, in the air, and under the water—these do not exhaust the delightful Christmas books that are provided for the fortunate children of this blessed year, 1900, for I have not mentioned the hundred or more fascinating volumes of George A. Henty.

Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie said not long since that the books of the Christmas season have come to be a part of the educational system of modern society. They touch almost every subject of contemporary interest. They deal with almost every problem of the hour and they generously meet the needs of a busy age in the matter of entertainment. It has been often and truly said that most of the books that are written for the holiday season are not books of permanent value. Few books that are published at any season live to become a part of the literature of the world. Of all the books that have been published during the last half century, how few have permanently enriched literature? Like the majority of mankind, they were born, died, and are forgotten. Yet during their brief existence they served their purpose: they amused, instructed, entertained. So with Christmas books—many of them serve only

LIFE AND LETTERS OF THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY. By his Son, Leonard Huxley. In two volumes. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $5.

We have two lives of the late Thomas Henry Huxley, but the one which takes precedence is naturally that written in two volumes by his son. It should command the interest and attention of all students of Huxley, and will doubtless be found satisfying and complete. Huxley's early life is here graphically described. At the age of nineteen his position was secure, and at twenty-six he was already launched upon a career of success. Throughout his life his energies were mainly devoted to organization, teaching, and polemical discussions, and, speaking comparatively, he devoted but small time and attention to serious writing. It fell to him to represent science to the world at large, and it was mainly through his influence that the biological schools at Oxford and Cambridge were so well equipped. His son's book, which to a great degree is made up of Huxley's own letters, particularly illustrates the man's sound sense and noble feelings, his fearless acceptance of the truth as he saw it, and his rejection of what to him seemed false. As a man and citizen he occupied a high place among Englishmen, and these memoirs ought to be of interest to others as well as those who claim kinship with Huxley through the link of Darwinism.

THE LIFE OF SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. By Sir Walter Armstrong, Director of the National Gallery. With 70 photogravure illustrations and 6 lithographic fac similes. Folio. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Folio, $25.

It is a mistake to suppose that the fame of Sir Joshua Reynolds is something which dates only from the last fifty years and is of foreign origin. The greatness of this English artist has been only cumulative and has increased with time. For a thorough study of one of the most illustrious of modern painters the opportunity is now presented. Sir Walter Armstrong, who is one of the Directors of the National Gallery, has devoted years to the completion of his task. The "Sir Joshua Reynolds" is uniform with the "Gainsborough." In looking at the portraits painted by an artist of a century ago, there is always a natural impulse to see how far the man or woman of a former age resembled the humanity of the present time. In studying the fine photogravures one is struck with the familiarity of the faces. Little "Nelly O'Brien" is the precise child you saw in the park yesterday. Sometimes, though there is a gap of a hundred years, it happens that the costumes of the ladies, as Sir Joshua painted them, might be worn to-day and pass with scarce a comment. "Mrs. Meyrick!" Why her pleasant manner impressed you when you saw her last week, and you hope to meet her soon again. "The Viscountess Crosie" never could have been good looking, for Sir Joshua was no flatterer. You might like "Mrs. Siddons," and think of the glories of the English stage, but then there is a picture of this master which every mother will adore, and it is the one where the Duchess of Devonshire is playing "clap hands" with the babies. The text of "The Life of Sir Joshua Reynolds" is of the greatest interest, for the artist was the friend and associate of Johnson, Burke, Goldsmith, and Garrick.

PAUL JONES: Founder of the American Navy. A History. By Augustus C. Buell. Portraits, maps, and plans. 2 vols. 12mo. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.

The popularity Paul Jones has recently attained in fiction makes his life, written by Augustus C. Buell, just at this time especially interesting. Mr. Buell is a descendant of a member of the crew of the Bon Homme Richard, who also sailed with Paul Jones in the Alfred, the Providence, and the Ranger. He perhaps had private sources from which to draw material for his two interesting volumes. The career of Jones seems to be popularly concentrated in the fight of the Serapis and the capture of the Drake, but these were, in fact, only incidents in a life full of changing interests. He was a Scotchman by birth, and the addition of "Jones" to his original name of John Paul was in accordance with the terms of the inheritance of a good-sized plantation in Virginia. He entered the Continental Navy at the outbreak of the Revolution, holding a secondary commission, but quickly advanced to the first rank. His entire life was romantic in the extreme, and to read it as written by Mr. Buell is indeed a literary pleasure. Jones accepted the commission of Rear Admiral from Catherine of Russia and spent several years in her service. Undoubtedly he had many of the qualities of the adventurer, and these qualities became more marked with years. He played a dramatic part in American history, was an attendant at many Courts, and even aspired to the love of a King's daughter. The book contains many of Jones's letters, together with extracts from his journal, contemporary pamphlets, memoirs, &c. Four years of residence at St. Petersburg gave Mr. Buell excellent opportunities to study Jones's life. On the whole, the life of Paul Jones, in itself intensely interesting, has an added charm under the skilful treatment of this author.

THE ROSSETTIS: DANTE GABRIEL AND CHRISTINA. By Elisabeth Luther Cary. With 27 photogravure and other illustrations. Large 8vo. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.75.

The Rossetti family is surely one of the most brilliant and interesting in the history of art and literature, and their lives, as described by Miss Cary, are full of poetry and romance. Nicola Rossetti, the grandfather of Dante and Christina, with which two members of the family the present volume is naturally most intimately concerned, was himself a man of many and extraordinary gifts. His son Gabriel married into the Polydori family in England, which also was of Italian origin, and their four children, in spite of their English surroundings, grew up in the atmosphere of Italy. It was undoubtedly his poem "The Blessed Damozel" which gave to Dante Gabriel Rossetti his high standing among poets, and it is for this poem that he is best known and loved by most people. If, as has been so often said, this wonderful lyric was written after reading Poe's "Raven," there is no trace of resemblance between the two poems, unless, indeed, it be in exquisite beauty. As a painter, it has been said of Rossetti that pictures and poems were to him almost synonymous and that he "postized his pictures and pictured his poems." The poems of Christina Rossetti are mostly of a deeply religious nature, and are far more restrained in their style than those of her brother. Miss Cary's book is illustrated with twenty-seven reproductions of portraits and paintings, several of the copies of pictures being here published for the first time. The volume is issued in the same style and size as her previous works on Tennyson and Browning, and extraordinary care and skill have been devoted to making the book attractive.

OLIVER CROMWELL. By John Morley. Elaborately illustrated from paintings, old prints, &c. Pp. 480. 8vo. New York: The Century Company. $3.50.

Mr. Morley simply designated his life of Oliver Cromwell as a sketch. Many critics have seen in it more than a biography, in fact, a history, being a faithful picture of the conditions of the Cromwellian period, the causes which led up to the Protectorate and the influences which it transmitted to future generations in Great Britain. It is said that Mr. Morley wrote his life of Cromwell for the purpose of finding relaxation from his task of putting together the monumental Gladstone biography. He had long been known as one of the most cultured members of the House of Commons, and as editor of The Fortnightly Review, he proved himself a man of many and varied achievements not only in politics, but in the more serious departments of history and biography. He had already written "Edmund Burke," "Rousseau," and "Voltaire," which not only placed him in the front rank of English biographers, but caused him to be regarded on the Continent as a conscientious student of French history. It is said to have been the success of these books which moved the editor of The Century to request Mr. Morley to undertake the life of Cromwell several years ago. After its first announcement in August, 1899, it was awaited with considerable expectation until its appearance in the following November as a serial in the magazine.

TWELVE GREAT ACTORS AND TWELVE GREAT ACTRESSES. In two volumes. By Edward Robins. Illustrated with photogravures and half-tones. Sold separately or together. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50 per vol.

The drama is the one of all arts which probably appeals with greatest force to the largest number of persons. Where a limited few are interested and conversant with the best in literature and painting, nearly every one is fascinated and pleased by the glare and illusions of the footlights. Yet its very transitory and fleeting qualities give to the art of acting that ephemeralism that makes it "remembered to-day and to-morrow forgot." There are, however, a few names that will go down in history so long as the histrionic art survives, and these are the ones that Mr. Robins has incorporated in his two volumes on "Twelve Great Actresses and Twelve Great Actors." Among the former he has included Anne Bracegirdle, Anne Oldfield, Peg Woffington, Mrs. Abington, Mrs. Siddons, Dora Jordan, Perdita Robinson, Fanny Kemble, Rachel, Charlotte Cushman, Adelaide Nellson, Ristori, while the latter show such names as David Garrick, John Philip Kemble, Edmund Kean, Junius Brutus Booth, Edwin Forrest, Charles Macready, Charles J. Mathews, Edwin Booth, Charles A. Fechter, William E. Burton, Edward A. Sothern, and Lester A. Wallack. To a careful study of memoirs and biographies Mr. Robins had added the results of his own experiences among theatrical people, and has shown in the whole work enthusiasm for dramatic art in general. The volumes are illustrated with reproductions in half-tone of drawings, prints, etchings, and paintings, many of which are very rare, and some of which are now published for the first time.

There is no subject, after all, calculated to arouse more general interest than that of woman, and the books written about her in general, or about any woman in particular, are sure of attentive readers. But when that volume deals with women of society, and those of our own country, the interest may well be said to double. "The Famous American Belles of the Nineteenth Century" is a book whose topics are still within the range of living memory. There are women within the covers that are still familiar to us and that bring back a host of personal recollections of our own of those handed down to us from sire to son. Here can be found the history of Margaret O'Neill, who, as Mrs. Baston, created no small flurry and excitement even in Colonial circles; Matilda Schuyler, before whose peerless beauty even the Prince of Wales gave homage, and Elizabeth Patterson, whose romantic marriage to Jerome Bonaparte while yet a minor was annulled by Napoleon I. There are also other sketches of no less interest. The book is daintily bound, and contains a colored frontispiece together with twenty full-page illustrations, including many portraits, and the whole is a book calculated to be of rare interest to any one studying the social history of America in the nineteenth century.

As Lord Rosebery happens to be the only living ex-Prime Minister that Great Britain has, and as it has been customary for Prime Ministers after retiring to produce some serious literary achievement, what the noble Lord has had to say about the career of Napoleon on Saint Helena has aroused more than usual interest. It is a character study, made up after a careful and intelligent reading of all original literature on the subject—diaries, journals, memoirs, &c.—that have been written. Incidentally Lord Rosebery finds considerable fault with the manner in which his country played the jailer to the fallen Emperor. He writes, "Were it possible we would ignore all this literature, as it is peculiarly painful for an Englishman to read. He must regret that his Government ever undertook the custody of Napoleon, and he must regret still more that the duty should have been discharged in a spirit so ignoble and through agents so unfortunate. If Saint Helena recalls painful memories to the French, much more poignant are those that it excites among ourselves." Lord Rosebery's study is written in an easy, graceful style, and, at times, in a mode almost colloquial. In his summing up of the character of Napoleon, he shows much sympathy, and in qualifying the definition of "greatness" he demonstrates that Napoleon, in political, military, and diplomatic life, came nearer establishing the criterion of practical greatness than either Cæsar or Alexander.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: POET, DRAMATIST, AND MAN. By Hamilton W. Mabie. With 8 photogravures and 100 illustrations in the text. 8vo. New York: The Macmillan Company. $6.

The first thing that strikes the reader, unless he feels at once great enthusiasm for what Mr. Mabie has to say about Shakespeare, is the illustrations. These consist of all kinds, from photogravures, reproductions of portraits and sculpture and scenes about London and Stratford, to photographic reproductions and engravings of relics connected with the poet's life, of rare prints and interesting documents. In themselves the illustrations form a fine collection of pictorial Shakespeareana. And what Mr. Mabie has attempted to do is what he has actually achieved. He has evidently been an enthusiastic and observing reader in Shakespearean literature, and from the mass of material has gradually built up the figure which, if not the actual Shakespeare, is so good an illusion that it is not worth while for anybody to attempt to prove the contrary. In a word, Mr. Mabie has written of Shakespeare's life in the same spirit in which the biographies of contemporaries are written. He reproduces the Elizabethan atmosphere and traces the education of the poet through the early years at Stratford, and later on in London, making up for a deficiency in actual data concerning Shakespeare himself by a liberal citation from contemporaneous writings. Later on, he considers the plays, not in their philological or aesthetic features, but in whatever respect the text reveals or indicates certain characteristics in the author.

ECCENTRICITIES OF GENIUS. Memories of Famous Men and Women of the Platform and Stage. By Major J. B. Pond. Octavo. Pp. 620. Nearly 100 half-tone portrait illustrations. Bound in English silk cloth, with gold stamp on side. Gilt top. New York: G. W. Dillingham. $3.50.

Here is a book of the kind that can be read and laid aside and read again, whose interest does not depend upon consecutive and steady reading, but which is calculated to answer that most exacting and difficult of duties—to pass away quickly and cheerfully that usually dreary interval known as "a few minutes of waiting." Indeed it is a book to be read at any time, for, open it where you will, there is unfailing interest and pleasure to be culled from its pages. No man is better able to write on the subject Major Pond has chosen than he himself. His wide experience as manager of lectures and lecturers has given him particular opportunities to study the eccentricities and peculiarities of the men and women with whom he has been brought into contact. Written in the easy pleasing style of the genial narrator, the book is primarily one obviously intended for amusement. Still, here and there in its pages are deeper glimpses of the real characters of some of the well-known men of the day that might easily stamp it as belonging to a more serious order of literature. Included in its pages are stories of such men as Henry Ward Beecher, Stanley, the explorer; Sir Edwin Arnold, Mark Twain, Ernest Seton-Thompson, Ian Maclaren, Marion Crawford, A. Conan Doyle, I. Zangwill, Jefferson, Irving, Anthony Hope, Thomas Nelson Page, and, in fact, almost every prominent lecturer of the last sixty years. Besides the original reminiscences, the book contains a number of interesting letters, some of historical significance, written by many of the men whom Major Pond describes.

LETTERS AND REMINISCENCES.

LETTERS OF THOMAS EDWARD BROWN, author of "Fo'c'sle Yarns." Edited, with an introductory memoir, by Sidney R. Irwin. In two volumes. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Westminster: Archibald Constable & Co., Limited. 1900. $4 net.

These letters, edited with a short biographical sketch, by Mr. Sidney Irwin of Clifton College, Bristol, give glimpses of a most delightful personality, a personality which will make them popular even with those to whom Mr. Brown's literary work is absolutely unknown. Without ambition, finding his happiness in reading and writing in his own home, in seeing or writing to his friends, and in long walks, Mr. Brown's life was singularly quiet and devoid of incident; yet his letters, as we read them, thrill with life and interest. He was one of ten children, being born in the Isle of Man in 1830. Much of his love for and familiarity with the English classics was probably due to his reading them again and again to his father, whose eyesight was very poor. Brown's father had written both prose and verse, while his mother was a most appreciative reader, especially of verse, so the son was virtually brought up in a literary atmosphere. The book is one which tempts quotations everywhere. The two main characteristics revealed are love for and knowledge of both music and literature, and some of the most attractive passages in his letters are those referring to the books he had read, and his estimate and criticisms of their value.

LITERARY FRIENDS AND ACQUAINTANCE: A PERSONAL RETROSPECT OF AMERICAN AUTHORSHIP. By W. D. Howells. Richly illustrated. Crown 8vo. Ornamental, uncut edges, gilt top. New York: Harper & Brothers. $2.50.

Much of the material which appears in this book has already been seen in some of the magazines, where it certainly was very good and inspiring reading, especially for persons who desire to know something about past literary tendencies in America, and in particular how these tendencies have been exemplified by certain men and women. If Mr. Howells is not exactly the doyen of American letters, he is at least so high up in the hierarchy as to give absolute authority to what he may desire to impart. It is no exaggeration to say that "Literary Friends" could have been written by no other American author. Mr. Howells came East from his Western home at the ripest period of the Boston and Cambridge group, and when Emerson, Lowell, Longfellow, James T. Fields, Hawthorne, Bayard Taylor, Holmes, and others were in their prime. These he learned to know and to admire. From regarding himself as a mere looker on and silent, or almost silent, listener, he at length took his place beside them, and now years after he portrays their characters as they appeared to him in all the charm and literary finish which he has mastered after so many years of sincere, industrious labor.

NEW EDITIONS.

THE CENTURY CLASSICS. "The Vicar of Wakefield." "Poems of Robert Herrick." "Pilgrim's Progress." "The Essays of Francis Bacon." "A Journal of the Plague Year." "Eothen." 12mos. New York: The Century Company. $1 per volume.

The series of classics which The Century Company has in the course of publication under the general title of "The Century Classics" should appeal to all lovers of the best literature who prefer their books in a form at once artistic and useful. Bound in a pretty shade of green with gold lettering, the first six volumes that have thus far been issued present a tempting appearance. Each book is prefaced by remarks, both pertinent and interesting, by men of high literary standing in the community, and the text itself is modernized only in so far as spelling and punctuation are concerned. Each volume contains a frontispiece consisting of an excellent portrait of its author. Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" is introduced by Bishop Henry Potter, who, by the way, scatters the illusion so long entertained that this masterpiece in literature was written while its author languished behind prison walls, although he agrees that "The Holy City" and "The Life and Death of Mr. Badman," were the product of his confinement in Bedford Jail. Thomas Bailey Aldrich has written an admirable essay introducing the "Poems of Robert Herrick," who, although "a poet of the rarest lyrical quality," has taken so long to come into his own. Prof. Woodberry's ease and grace of style serves as a beautiful prelude to the essays of Bacon. The other volumes in the series that are now ready are Defoe's "Journal of the Plague Year," with an introduction by Sir Walter Besant, whose knowledge of Old London can hardly be excelled; "The Vicar of Wakefield," made more charming than ever by Henry James's scholarly introduction, and Kinglake's "Eothen," in the preface to which Mr. James Bryce comments on the writing of books in general, and the writing of "Eothen" in particular.

THE PSALMS OF DAVID. Including sixteen full-page illustrations and numerous decorations in the text depicting the life of David as the shepherd, poet, warrior, and King. By Louis Rhead, together with an introductory study by Newell Dwight Hillis. New York, Chicago, Toronto: Fleming H. Revell Company. $2.50.

Readers who like old friends in a new guise will be interested in the new edition of "The Psalms of David," illustrated with cover design by Louis Rhead, and an introduction by Newell Dwight Hillis. Mr. Hill-lis, in his introduction, gives a careful and intelligent study of the career of David in its successive stages, viewing him not merely as one of the host of Biblical characters whose personality is more or less shadowy and unreal, but as a man who lived, and whose life was calculated to excite interest and admiration in many directions. All its romance, pathos, and tragedy are touched upon in style both simple and eloquent. Mr. Rhead's illustrations are adequate in every way. There is a peculiar old-fashioned character about them which harmonized well with the text. In the care he has devoted to dress and other minor details, Mr. Rhead has stamped his work as the result of historical as well as Biblical research. The text is printed in clear, black type upon a faintly tinted paper, presenting something the appearance of old parchment and adding greatly to the richness of the whole. The volume is a conveniently sized quarto bound in a rich red cloth tastefully ornamented in gold.

RAMONA. A new illustrated edition of Helen Jackson's romance of Southern California. With an introduction written by Susan Coolidge. With 25 photogravures and head pieces by Henry Sandham. 2 vols. 8vo. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $6. Half levant, $12. Limited edition with duplicate plates and four water-color illustrations in half morocco, $15.

The author of this book, who has been called "the Murillo in literature," some time ago produced a novel which was at once accepted as a true picture of Monterey days in California, told with much grace and skill. In the new illustrated edition no pains or expense have apparently been spared, either in the letter press or in illustrations to make the book a worthy example of American book building. The illustrations by Mr. Henry Sandham show a thorough acquaintance with the scenes depicted in the book. It so happened that he visited California with the author at the time she was accumulating her material for the story, and his original sketches and suggestions for the pictures he had made for this edition were drawn upon the scene of the tale, with Mrs. Jackson close at hand to suggest certain points of emphasis. The illustrations, too, derive particular value from the fact that some of the sketches and studies were made from life at the time that the author and her artist co-worker met the original and before the restorations of late years had materially altered the mission buildings and other places described in the romance.

MARIUS THE EPICUREAN. His Sensations and Ideas. By Walter Pater. With introduction by William Marion Reedy. Two volumes. Portland, Me.: Thomas B. Mosher. $8 net. 35 copies on Japan vellum, $25 net.

The new edition of "Marius the Epicurean" is a composite triumph of publisher's, printer's, and designer's arts. The Greek motto prefixed to the title exquisitely describes it as "a Winter dream when the nights are longest." The text of this edition is as originally published, while the foreword by Mr. William Marion Reedy of St. Louis shows keen appreciation for the book from an American's point of view. The work is concluded by a final note taken from Richard Le Gallienne's "Retrospective Reviews." Mr. Mosher's reprints have too often been spoken of with admiration in the columns of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW for readers to require much to be said here in order to convince them of the artistic qualities of the present book. Printed in old-style Roman face, with rules around each page, and with new and original head-bands, tail-pieces, and rubricated initials, it is a veritable joy to the eyes of book lovers. The edition is issued in two-volume large quarto size, with portrait on Japan vellum, and is printed on Van Gelder hand-made paper with uncut edges and in a slide case. There are, too, a few limited and numbered copies printed entirely on Japan vellum.

BALZAC'S WORKS. Edition Grand Format de la France. Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormeley. In 41 vols. The edition limited to 40 numbered sets. New York and Boston: Hardy, Pratt & Co. $25 per volume. $1,025 per set.

Miss Wormeley, who probably knows more about Honoré de Balzac and his works than anybody else in this country, she having made the "father of realism" her life's study, has produced the translation which appears in this magnificent edition of the works of the great French writer. Balzac is a difficult author to translate, but Miss Wormeley's work, which is the result of years of study and experiment, is regarded by the best critics as not only a marvel of industrious skill and faithful labor, but as a great literary achievement. It is interesting to know that Miss Wormeley has spent more time in translating Balzac's works than was ever occupied by the author in their original construction. Each set in this new edition contains 284 illustrations in photogravure by French artists under the general superintendence of the noted firm of Goupil & Co., Paris. Each artist has been delegated to illustrate the volume to which his individual talent is best suited, and they have entered into the work with the greatest enthusiasm and determination to make this a monumental work. Every illustration is colored by hand in an exquisite manner by well-known miniature painters, forming a galaxy of aquarelles and a work high up in the annals of bookmaking.

The American public is to-day fully appreciative of Balzac, due to the many translations, but under the same conditions has not had the opportunity of understanding the merits of George Sand. If a first place is to be accorded to Balzac and a close second to Victor Hugo, there can be little question but that George Sand is the most remarkable woman writer of the century. Born in 1804, Amantine Lucile Aurore Dupin had in her veins the blood of Maurice de Saxe. During the first ten years of her childhood she lived at Nohant. It was then that she imbibed a love for the country and for peasant life. From the happiness of Nohant she went to Paris, and passed some years there, at the convent of the English Augustinians. Certainly her cloistered life in Paris brought about a desire for the greater liberty of the woman. Her marriage with M. Dudevant was one of convénance. There was no love in it. Though she was the mother of two children, she left her husband and went to Paris. Here, in connection with Jules Sandeau, literary work was begun. Sandeau was at once struck with the singular ability of Mme. Dudevant, and assured her that she had the power to write without his help. Adopting the name of George Sand, her first original romance was "Indiana." Then at once she became famous. "Valentine," "Lelia," "Le Secrétaire Intime," "Jacques," "Mauprat," and "Consuelo" followed. It was a delight for George Sand to return to the life of the fields. Nothing in French literature is more simple and touching than her stories of the peasantry. "François le Champi," "La Mare au Diable," "La Petite Fadette," are masterpieces. In her comprehension of French rural life she fered widely from Balzac. Messrs. George Barrie & Son, in their fine edition of George Sand, will give readers an introduction to what are the distinctive qualities of a really great writer of romance.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS: From This World to That Which Is to Come. With 14 full-page etchings by William Strang, printed on heavy laid paper, with full gilt edges. New York: Brentano's. $4.

This edition of Bunyan's masterpiece, in fine binding and with elegant letter press, is rendered particularly attractive by the etchings of William Strang. Persons who have seen old editions of this work illustrated with hideous but sympathetic wood cuts, will appreciate Mr. Strang's work, for land. In certain pictures, where the allegorical way, as Bunyan did with his, but as occurrences that might have happened to any traveler in a strange and unknown land. In certain pictures where the allegorical touch was employed by the old engravers, Mr. Strang uses a curious symbolic method. Thus from every point of view the pictures of Brentano's edition of "The Pilgrim's Progress" are thoroughly modern.

YESTERDAYS WITH AUTHORS. By James T. Fields. Holiday Edition. With 28 Photogravure Portraits and Views. 1 vol. 8vo. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.50.

Mr. James T. Fields's "Yesterdays with Authors," which he first copyrighted in 1871, is an excellent proof of the undiminishing demand by the public for such books, containing reminiscences and gossip about the men of genius who have done so much for cultivation and amusement. For many years editor of The Atlantic Monthly, Mr. Fields had remarkable opportunities to know the men and women about whom he has written. There is throughout the book a display of sympathy and love for his subjects that alone would cause what he says to be of interest. Take, for instance, his fine appreciation of the genius of Thackeray shown throughout his sketch of him, which contains also so many quaint and droll stories about the author of "Vanity Fair." Then there was Hawthorne, "the rarest genius America has given to literature," whose "men and women have magic of their own," and whose place will long remain vacant among American men of letters. There are sketches, too, of Dickens, Wordeworth, Miss Mitford, and Barry Cornwall, besides letters (some in fac simile) written by them all. In addition to these longer appreciations there are passing touches upon the genius of Leigh Hunt, Robert Burns, the Brownings, Pope, and a number of others. Typographically and as a specimen of binding the book is most pleasing. The twenty-eight photogravure portraits and views are especially fine, some standing out with almost the clearness of a painting, while others suggest the soft outline and delicacy of a pencil sketch.

HISTORY.

MORE FAMOUS HOMES OF GREAT BRITAIN AND THEIR STORIES. Edited by A. H. Mahan. Royal 8vo. Vellum crimson cloth, full gilt sides, &c. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $7.50.

We remember the beautiful edition issued about a year ago describing some famous homes of Great Britain, and knowing the charm of the first volume we are glad to welcome its sequel, "More Famous Homes," which makes its appearance for the holiday season. The volume is edited by Mr. A. H. Mahan, as was its predecessor, and tells the stories of twelve more historic homesteads of England. Among the writers are Lord Sackville, Lady Glamis, Lady Ernestine Edgcumbe, Countess of Pembroke, Lord Savile, and others, and their descriptions of Cotehele, Knole, Glamis, Blickling Hall, Longleat, Levens Hall, Mount Edgcumbe, Wilton House, Inveraray, Rufford Abbey, Naworth Castle, and Compton Winyates all make exceedingly interesting reading matter. These papers first appeared as a series in the Pall Mall Magazine, and Lord Frederic Hamilton's introduction to the new volume is an interesting survey of how and why they were written. Briefly he has classified them as follows: Cotehele, Levens, and Compton

Winyates are manor houses—that is, buildings of comparatively modest dimensions, built and primarily intended for dwelling houses. Glamis and Nawerth are feudal castles built for defense, but have been converted into residences. Knole and Rufford are excellent examples of monastic and ecclesiastical buildings adapted to domestic use, while Blickling, Longleat, and Wilton are stately palaces built at a time when it was considered proper for a great nobleman to surround himself with some degree of magnificence. The work is illustrated with nearly 200 photographs, and a photogravure of Compton Winyates, viewed from the southeast, serves as a frontispiece.

RULERS OF THE SOUTH: SICILY, CALABRIA, AND MALTA. By F. Marion Crawford. Illustrated by 28 photogravures and 91 illustrations in the text by Henry Brokman. 2 vols. 8vo. Uniform with "Ave Roma Immortalis." New York: The Macmillan Company. $6. Also a large paper edition, limited to 150 copies. $12.

As a companion volume to "Ave Roma Immortalis" Mr. Crawford has told about the formative influences of Southern Italy, of Sicily, of Calabria, and of Malta, and has thereby produced a work which has a distinct place in historical writing. Southern Italy, with the adjacent islands, was always the playground of the peoples who succeeded each other as lords of the Mediterranean. Mr. Crawford deals with his subject with a fine appreciation of the chronicler's art, and the coherence of his narrative is maintained by his adopting something of the style of the documents from which he translates. It is a curious fact that the deeds of these nations mentioned rarely concern more than themselves, and their history is a long line of romantic and poetic events to which Northern and Western Europe yield no suggestion. The volumes are handsomely bound, and the letter press is most admirable. Illustrations in black and white by Henry Brokman and photogravure reproductions from photographs show the modern appearance of these localities, which are described by Mr. Crawford with so much sympathy. Apart from its intrinsic literary and historical interest and value, "Rulers of the South" may be regarded as a handsome gift book for the holiday season.

THE TRANSIT OF CIVILIZATION FROM ENGLAND TO AMERICA IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By Dr. Edward Eggleston. 8vo. Cloth. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

The author of "The Beginners of a Nation" has now produced an independent work, but which also may be studied second in the series upon which he has so long been engaged. His object is to show exactly what America owes to Europe, the basis of which obligations was laid in the seventeenth century. An idea may be given of Dr. Eggleston's scheme through the titles of the chapters: "Medical Outfit of the Early Colonists," "Medical Notions at the Period of Settlement," "Folks Each and Mother English," "Weights and Measures of Conduct," "The Tradition of Education," "Land Holding in the Early Colonies." "The Transit of Civilization" is not a history, as is usually understood by the word, but it is a series of historical pictures describing the many phases of American life at a certain period, and relating how these phases were made to prevail. The chapter relating to the early speech of the colonists, to their folklore and literature, will particularly appeal to literary persons, especially those who care for the historical romance. To the same persons, also, will be interesting the pages which relate to the moral code and weights and measures of conduct, which are explained with an intimacy of knowledge which throws a new light upon the moral standards of the seventeenth century settlers in America.

EARLY NEW YORK HOUSES WITH HISTORICAL GENEALOGICAL NOTES. By William S. Pelletreau, A. M. Photographs of old houses. Original illustrations by C. G. Moller. Entire edition of 325 copies. Three hundred copies on fine paper at $10; on Japan paper, with duplicate set of prints, in ten parts, $3 per part. New York: Francis P. Harper.

Early New York! It is becoming every day more difficult to find it. The ancient quarters of the city are being obliterated. It has taken the author of the work under notice years of patient study to collect his many facts. A topic of this kind includes the history of the families who have been the founders of New York, as the Beekmans, Blackwells, Coopers, Coutants, De Lanceys, de Peysters, Livingstons, Mollers, Van Cortlandts, and many others. The description of the old landmarks, and the pictures of them, will preserve for all time to come the exact idea of the remote past. Such a subject requires the best typographical skill. The publisher has done all he could to make "Early New York" a fine specimen of American bookmaking. In addition to the photographs there are many original head and tail pieces from the pencil of Mr. C. G. Moller. If artistic taste be present, door-knockers and fire buckets of the last century may be made highly decorative.

POETRY.

AN AMERICAN ANTHOLOGY. 1787-1899. By Edmund Clarence Stedman. Selections illustrating the Editor's Critical Review of American Poetry in the Nineteenth Century. With a frontispiece. 8vo. Pp. 950. Gilt top. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.

In his "An American Anthology" Mr. Edmund C. Stedman has given us a companion book to his "Victorian Anthology," published in 1895. The two books are uniform in size, binding, &c., and, taken separately or together, would make an attractive Christmas gift to lovers of the best poetry. As in his previous book, Mr. Stedman has prefaced each collection of poems with a short biographical sketch of their authors, which should give the volume an additional and permanent value. In his introduction the editor makes a complete survey of American poetry to the end of the nineteenth century. He points out a distinctive difference between American and English poets in the tendency of the latter to group themselves into schools and his inability so to classify the poets of our own land. For those lovers of poetry who wish only the best representatives of American verse, Mr. Stedman's book seems likely to fill the need and to stand for long years without a competitor. It contains an excellent frontispiece portrait of the author and is attractively bound in red cloth stamped in gold.

*THE RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Comprising the Metrical Translations by Edward Fitz Gerald and E. H. Whinfield and the Prose Version of Justin Huntly McCarthy. Edited, with an Introduction, by Jessie B. Rittenhouse. 12mo. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. 1900. $2.

From time to time so many editions of the Rubaiyat of Omar have appeared that we have come to look upon them as matters of course. Yet, in this sea of Omar literature, the present publication should not be overlooked. The volume is one of the most complete and comprehensive editions. It includes the fourth edition of Fitz Gerald's version, with notes showing the variations in the first, second, and third editions; also Justin H. McCarthy's prose version, together with his poem to Omar, "Dear Sultan of the Persian Song." In addition to these there is E. H. Whinfield's second revised editions of the quatrains of Omar, preceded by a poem by Mathilde Blind on "Reading the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam in a Kentish Rose Garden." There are, also, interesting comparative stanzas from the three versions included in the present volume. The book also includes a bibliography, divided into sections, and an interesting introduction by Jessie B. Rittenhouse. In this introduction Miss Rittenhouse reviews all the circumstances which led to Fitz Gerald's interest in Omar and the merits of other translations as compared with his. The typographical effect of the volume is pleasing. The title page is attractively rubricated, and an excellent portrait of Fitz Gerald serves as a frontispiece. The cover, bearing the designer's initials, is of dark blue cloth tooled in gold. On the whole it is one of the most complete and satisfying editions of "Omar's deathless song" that has lately fallen into our hands.

The title of this volume is taken from the first poem, which is written in the old familiar dialect. It voices the sentiment felt rather by the man who has grown up away from his birthplace than by the wanderer from home, whose loneliness found expression in John Howard Paine's "Home, Sweet Home." The first stanza of "Home Folks" reads:

You home folks, aid your grateful guest—
Bear with his pondering, wandering ways;
When idlest he is busiest,
Being a dreamer of the days.

The patriotic poem, entitled "The Name of Old Glory," finds a prominent place in this volume. In fact this collection of verse betrays a fine patriotic spirit throughout, whether expressed or merely intimated. There are poems, too, in which the writer reverts to his broad Hoosier dialect. One may read, touched by pathos or humor as the case may be, "Christmas Along the Wires," "My Dancin' Days is Over," "Home Ag'in," "A Feel in the Chris'mas Air," and "Our Queer Old World." Other dialects, too, somewhat unfamiliar in Mr. Riley's verse, have found expression in his lines, possibly in the nature of experiment. Of this sort are some poems in the Scotch and negro dialects and in the Irish dialect, a good example of the last-named being the "Green Grass of Old Ireland," in which both Irish tongue and melody are handled with considerable skill:

The green grass av owld Ireland,
Indade, an' balm 't 'u'd be
To eyes like mine that drip wid brine
As salty as the sea!
For still the more I'm stoppin' here,
The more I'm sore to see
The glory av the green grass av owld Ireland.

TRAVEL.

THROUGH THE FIRST ANTARCTIC NIGHT. By Dr. Frederick A. Cook, M. D. A narrative of the voyage of the Belgica among newly discovered lands and over an unknown sea about the south pole. 8vo, pp., 500. Illustrated by four colored plates and over one hundred black and white drawings. Index, full appendix of scientific results, etc. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $5.

So much has been written about the north pole and the explorations and discoveries in that region, and so much romantic and scientific interest has been centred about that neighborhood that in consequence, we have heard almost nothing of the opposite end of the earth's axis. In 1772 an expedition started for the south pole and met with only partial success. Sixty years later other expeditions were planned and executed, but without very brilliant results. Again sixty years elapsed, and only recently a party was sent out by the Belgian Government, commanded by Lieut. Adrien de Gerlache, and the adventures of this gentleman and his crew of the good ship Belgica are those which Dr. Frederick A. Cook describes. The strange places visited, their queer inhabitants and curious animals, atmospheric phenomena, and all the hardships as well as pleasures of such a voyage are told with peculiar clearness and interest. Besides the excellent reading matter the book affords, there is a full appendix, detailing the many important scientific discoveries. As a specimen of good workmanship the volume is delightful, two or three tinted pictures are included with a view to giving some idea of the color scheme of the antarctic region, while the other reproductions of photographs are all that could be wished for.

THE ASCENT OF MOUNT ST. ELIAS. By H. R. H. Prince Luigi Amedeo di Savoia, Duke of Abruzzi. Narrated by Filippo de Filippi. Illustrated by Vittorio Sella and translated by Signora Linda Villari, with the author's supervision. 8vo, pp. xvi., 341. New York: Frederick A. Stokes & Co. $12.50.

The book, detailing the ascent of Mount St. Elias by the Duke of Abruzzi, is one which, just at this time, commands romantic as well as scientific interest. The party, consisting of the Duke, the author; Lieut. Cagni of the Royal Navy, Cavaliere Gonella, Cavaliere Sella, and five Alpine guides, started from Turin on May 17, 1897. At Sitka they were joined by ten American porters, four of them university students, and on June 23 a landing was made on the west coast of Yakutat Bay. The sole object of the expedition was to reach the top of Mount St. Elias and how successfully this was accomplished the book testifies. It is not weighted too heavily with scientific details, although in appendices are detailed descriptions of the equipments, meteorologic observations, medical notes, &c. In paper and typography the volume is luxurious and includes some splendid photogravures. It is, on the whole, an excellent specimen of book-making from every point of view.

PARIS OF TO-DAY. By Richard Whiteing. Illustrations by André Castaigne. Pp. 250. 10x7 inches. New York: The Century Company. $5.

Mr. Richard Whiteing first achieved fame in this country through "No. 5 John Street," although years before he had written "The Island," which since the publication of "No. 5 John Street" has been revised and reprinted. The book before us, as its title indicates, deals with contemporary Paris, not from the point of view of a confirmed Parisian, nor yet from that of a wandering foreigner, but from that of an intelligent man of letters, who penetrates and elucidates his subject from an Anglo-Saxon standard. Mr. Whiteing not only describes the fashionable Paris, the life on the boulevards, and the life of artistic Paris, but he gives much valuable information to the serious student in his essay dealing with the French Government. His work is strikingly emphasized by the Franco-American artist, André Castaigne, whose pictures are as sincere as they are full of a fine imagination. In his "Paris of To-day" Mr. Whiteing shows the same accuracy in description, the same dexterity in managing mere facts, and the same intimacy with his subject which characterize the literary, if not the sociological, value of "No. 5 John Street." "Paris of To-day" is bound in dark green cloth, with a decorating design embodying the municipal arms of Paris stamped in red, white, and gold.

SPORT AND TRAVEL, EAST AND WEST. By Frederick Courteney Selous. With eighteen plates and thirty-five illustrations in the text. Medium 8vo. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $4.

Mr. Selous has a wide reputation as the greatest of European sportsmen, for he has tracked his game in all the quarters of the globe. The precision, the long range of modern small arms, the weight of the projectiles, have all been factors advantageous to the hunter of to-day; nevertheless, the element of skill and of courage is as necessary now as in the past. The African buffalo is just as dangerous in 1900 as it was in the time of Gordon Cumming. Mr. Selous's prowess is thoroughly established. He has had encounters with all kinds of savage beasts, and his escapes have been marvelous. In the volume, published by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., the hunting episodes are "A Month in Asia Minor," "After Wild Goats in the Maimon Dagh," "Travel, Sport, and Ornithology in Asia Minor," "Notes of a Later-Day Hunting Trip in the Rocky Mountains," and "The Second Trip to the Rocky Mountains" Mr. Selous's literary method is excellent, and his acquaintance with natural history thorough. Many will agree with him when he writes that the name given to the prong-horned antelope—Antilocapra Americana—is not a proper one. The prong-horn is a true antelope, with nothing of the goat or sheep about it.

LITERARY RAMBLES AT HOME AND ABROAD. By Dr. Theodore F. Wolfe. 16mo. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

Dr. Theodore F. Wolfe's new volume on "Literary Rambles at Home and Abroad" makes the fourth of the chain of essays published by him, under the captions of "A Literary Pilgrimage," "Literary Shrines," and "Literary Haunts and Homes." There is undoubtedly a decided charm to be drawn from reading Mr. Wolfe's pleasant descriptions of his rambles among that world which belongs to the home life of the creators of our books. In his pleasant, easy way he takes us "Up the Hudson," stopping to tell us about Poe, Audubon, Irving, John Kendrick Bangs, Mrs. Barr, and many others. "A New Jersey Ramble" brings us among the home scenes of the Gilders, Stephen Crane, and Thomas Dunn English, while "Where Stockton Wrote His Stories" has enough charm in its very title to set us brooding over the delightful stories that were written there. Then there are "The Haunts of Walt Whitman" described, "A Literary Pilgrimage by the Delaware," and a ramble through Stratford-on-Avon. He takes us among the scenes of Byron's life. Hunt, Thackeray, Scott, Dickens, Coleridge, Southey, Wordsworth, Sydney Smith, Ruskin, and all the other literary lights of the past and present are included in his pilgrimages. Four photogravures, of "Claymont," "The Tomb of Walt Whitman," "Ancient Hucknall Church," and "Dove Cottage," give added interest to the book, while a complete index of the four volumes in the series is included in this one, thereby making this particular collection of rambles acceptable as part of a series or an independent book.

AMERICA: PICTURESQUE AND DESCRIPTIVE. By Joel Cook. Illustrated with seventy-five photogravures from original negatives. In three vols. Crown, 8vo. Full gilt. Philadelphia: Henry T. Coates & Co. $7.50. Other editions (full polished calf,) $15, and edition de luxe, (limited to 150 copies,) $15.

It has been estimated that Americans spend about $100,000,000 annually in foreign travel. As a preparation for this, they read books of travel and study the guide books descriptive of London, Paris, Rome, or Berlin. Books of foreign impressions are sold widely in America, and yet very few persons have perhaps thought how America might be written about in a similar way. Joel Cook, author of "England, Picturesque and Descriptive," has attempted to write a book of history, customs, and impressions of the United States and Canada. The work is made up chiefly from notes taken down by the author during many years of extended travel. The first volume, beginning at Chesapeake Bay, gives some descriptions of the early settlement along that coast, together with a history of the communities that are now found from the coast northward to Chicago and the great lakes. The second volume treats in the same way of the history and development from the coast of Southern New York northward to the St. Lawrence River and northeastward to the Berkshire Hills. In a similar manner, the territory between Massachusetts Bay and the St. Lawrence is covered, as are also the Valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and the Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific Coast.

FICTION.

TOMMY AND GRIZEL. By James M. Barrie. Illustrated by Bernard Partridge. 12mo. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

The history of T. Sandys, Esq., is now complete in two volumes. To those who have already read "Sentimental Tommy" little need be said to whet their interest in the story of the boy now grown into a man, yet a boy still, for all that. Of the pure beauty of Barrie's style who can speak enough? He has infused into every one of his characters that quality of his genius which makes them stand before us, not as the puppets of his fancy, but as men and women, thinking and feeling for themselves, acting out their own lives, and meeting their own deserts. All the old friends whom we knew in Thrums, when we played with Tommy and his band at "the Cuttle-Well," we meet again. Corp and Gavinia are married now, and there is a wonderful young Corp whom we never saw before, but who, for all that, is of vast importance. There is Pym—but, ah! yes—he is a new acquaintance too, the first stepping-stone, as it were, to Tommy's greatness. Pym's rules for authors are surely worthy of attention by that struggling band that works, and tries and fails—and sometimes succeeds. And there is Grizel—beautiful, honest Grizel, whom, as we close the book, we "see for the last time rocking her arms with the crooked smile upon her face." How can we describe her? Under the magic of Mr. Barrie's pen she grows into perfect womanhood, the roughest lines of her character smoothing and molding themselves into a harmonious whole. Of Tommy, the complex, we dare not speak. Here is a character too manifold, too delicately constructed, too sensitive, too altogether incomprehensible, for any but the master to approach. And Mr. Barrie follows him with inexorable justice; there is no dodging, no shrinking. Tommy deserved his fate—and Tommy meets it. But even at the end we catch a glimpse of the other figures in the tale grouping themselves about his central one, and, in our hearts, we are glad that poor Grizel could, after all, "make of his life the story of a perfect lover."

ELEANOR. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. Author of "Robert Elsmere," "Marcella," "David Grieve," &c. Two vol. edition. Illustrated by A. E. Sterner. Post 8vo. Cloth. Royal blue and gold. Uncut edges, gilt tops. (In a box) $3; popular edition, 1 vol., $1.50. New York: Harper & Brothers.

THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW has already expressed at length its sincere admiration of Mrs. Ward's latest production, and anything it might now say could only be a reiteration of former praise. The book clearly shows the struggle between the old Italy and the new; the Italy which the Pope holds in the hollow of his hand, and that young, strong Italy, emerging from the old traditions, and threatening to completely overthrow them. The story breathes the Italian atmosphere throughout—we feel and see the blue skies, the lakes, the mountains of the South. And woven with the hand of a master is the thread of the human love story it tells. The two heroines, Eleanor Burgoyne and Lucy Foster, are the direct antithesis of each other; the one, an Englishwoman, one of those "fleeting flowers that bloom for a day at the summit"; the other, an American girl, with the honest, simple faiths of her puritanic New England. To attempt to here give even a synopsis of the story would seem an impossible task, and one almost brutal, for its charm can be no more described than the scent of the rose or the tint of its petals. Albert Sterner has added much to the attractiveness of the volumes by his sympathetic illustrations. Among holiday books, this one should shine conspicuously.

RICHARD YEA-AND-NAY. By Maurice Hewlitt, author of "The Forest Lovers," "Little Novels of Italy," &c. Cloth, 12mo. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

Richard Coeur de Lion has already figured in many novels. As the "Black Knight" he has played his part in the fiction of many generations, representing the very flower of chivalry and romance. In history he has played no less, if, alas, a more tragic part, and now, as we meet him again between the covers of Mr. Hewlitt's new book we find him traversing his path amid a blending of history and romance which throws a new light on our heretofore dim impression of one of the most contradictory characters in English history. The thread of the story shifts from France to England, to Palestine, and thence to prison, but whether we be among the sunny vineyards of the South, the green valleys of England, or the olive-clad hills of Palestine, we are alike in a fairy land created for us by the magic of Mr. Hewlitt's fancy. The characters of the book are all boldly conceived, the creations of the author's imagination standing out with as much strength and clearness as their companions taken from the pages of history. In action and incident there is no pause, and a steady stream of adventure runs through the novel. We hear and see the sounds and sights of battle, are blinded by the gleam of axe and sword; our ears ring with the moans of the wounded or the yells of the victors. Following the lead of the impetuous Richard we rush wildly on, on, on, through the book, yet pausing many times over some of the most exquisite love passages, and shedding many a tear over the tragedy of it all. Surely we are but clay in Mr. Hewlitt's hands, and he molds our moods even as he does the course and character of his book.

Mr. Thomas Nelson Page's new edition of "The Old Gentleman of the Black Stock," like all the works of that author, can only evoke the one criticism, "charming." He has taken the opportunity that this new issue of the story has occasioned to enlarge it greatly from the original sketch as it appeared about three or four years ago, so that readers who have already been introduced to those delightful young people—Basham Miles and Elizabeth Dale, to say nothing of the kindly "old gentleman," may have an opportunity to become better acquainted with them, while those who have never met them can certainly find no more alluring edition in which to read the book. Mr. Howard Chandler Christy has really done much toward making it irresistible by his illustrations, which show the most perfect delicacy of touch and feeling. His color effects, unlike so many of the tinted illustrations we now see, are not offensive in their brightness, but create the impression of exquisite water-color paintings. Margaret Armstrong has also added her quota of good work in the cover design, which shows the "lover-scarred beech," with its initials, which occupies so prominent a place in the tale, as well as silhouette portraits of "B. M." and "E. D." As a whole the book may well nigh be ranked among the most pleasing books of fiction of the year. It is issued as a companion to "Santa Claus's Partner" in similar form and binding, and the two together or separately should prove most attractive when the question of books for "Christmas gifts" protrudes itself into one's thoughts.

QUISANTE. By Anthony Hope. A novel now first issued, without previous serial publication. Size, 4¾x7¼ inches. Cloth. Pp. 376. Gilt top. New York: The Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.50.

Anthony Hope has left those charming and romantic principalities and kingdoms where his comedies and dramas were wont to be played out, and where we have accustomed ourselves to look for him. In his latest book we find him choosing England's political circles as the background for his story, and a diplomatic politician aiming for a seat in Parliament, and finally securing it, as the hero. As in "The King's Mirror," the hero's psychological development is the central point of interest, and his mental and moral growth form the keynote to the story. The other characters seem to exist only so far as are necessary to throw into more striking relief the figure of Alexander Quisanté, the hero. From beginning to end the book shows with wonderful clearness the rise and fall of his moods. His vivid personality impresses itself upon the reader's mind, as it does upon the minds and lives of the people surrounding him. There is a fascination about the character which, if not of the same quality as that which held us spellbound while reading the Zenda stories, "The King's Mirror," or even the "Dolly Dialogues," is none the less strong and compelling.

EBEN HOLDEN. By Irving Bacheller. 12mo. Gold lettered on red cloth. Gilt top. Boston: The Lothrop Publishing Company. $1.50.

The popularity of "Eben Holden" has been immense. It has already gone through many editions. Though 125,000 volumes have been sold, the demand is continuous. It has the distinguishing merit of being a pure and natural story, and with a moral. Uncle Eb is a character which can stand alone, but with Hope and Bill Brower, we have a trio of worthies. The descriptive portions of the fiction are happily told. You get the true insight into the woods. Of the books of this year, "Eben" has been the most lauded by those whose opinions are worthy of respect. A good book is worth a handsome setting, and so the Lothrop Publishing Company has been careful in the manufacture of the volume. It is, then, as elegant in paper and binding as is possible. It is the perfection of "get up." The book of predilection you wish to preserve. It hurts you when the binding is poor to see your treasured work in a slip-shod condition. It is to guard against such misfortune that the publishers of "Eben Holden" have done their best to insure the durability of the book.

VISITING THE SIN. A Tale of Mountain Life in Kentucky and Tennessee. By Emma Rayner. 12mo. Decorative cloth. Pp. 448. Boston: Small, Maynard & Co. $1.50.

Miss Rayner assures the readers of her romance that although the plot of "Visiting the Sin" is entirely fictitious, yet there are but few of the incidents that do not rest on a foundation of truth. If then there be something unconventional in the romance, we must bear in mind that the story has to do with an uncommonly uncivilized people who live in the mountain districts of Kentucky and Tennessee. Perhaps it is not a pleasant picture. We even are bold enough to believe that there are manners and ways of thought in those sections of the country which show but little improvement over the conditions of the mediaeval age. Recent study of these parts of the United States are convincing that a certain savagery still exists just in those portions of the two States Miss Rayner describes. Under such conditions the opportunity for dramatic construction is superabundant, and the author takes the fullest advantage of it. The heroine, Naomi Mozingo, is vigorously conceived. A singularly pathetic figure is of a son who is haunted by the awful picture of his father's guilt.

Mrs. Dudeney's former work, "Folly Corner," attracted marked attention, and gave its author a distinguished position in modern fiction. "Men of Marlowe's," the most recent production of the same writer, has to do with the residents of one of the English inns, like those in the Temple. There is much strength and vigor shown in the connected stories which make up the volume. There is a tragic turn imparted to some of the episodes which are strongly written, and Mrs. Dudeney can be humorous, too, at times.

UNCANONIZED. By Margaret Horton Potter. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. 12mo. $1.50.

Miss Margaret H. Potter's romance has to do with monastic life in the thirteenth century, during the reign of King John. The leading character is Anthony Fitz-Hubert, a brilliant young courtier, and the son of the Archbishop of Canterbury. To insure the safety of his father's soul, Anthony enters the cloisters. The young man has been enamored with the charms of the Princess Eleanor. The author describes the torture of a heroic nature and the stifling of human ambitions. In this romance, the social and political conditions of a noted period in English history are well described, and the work shows the most painstaking and conscientious research. The popularity of "Uncanonized" is such that it has reached a third edition.

PENELOPE'S EXPERIENCES. By Kate Douglas Wiggin. In two volumes, 8vo. Printed from new plates on a fine English book paper, with decorative title pages and with bindings from a design of Charles E. Brock. Boston: Printed at the Riverside Press and published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.

Whoever knows Mrs. Wiggin certainly knows Penelope, Salemina, and Francesca, or if that delightful acquaintance is denied the reader, it is our earnest suggestion that no time be lost in meeting those three interesting ladies. Penelope, "short of thirty," with artistic proclivities and strongly antagonistic to the idea of love; Salemina, "under forty," and a "philanthropist of the Boston philanthropists, limited," and Francesca, "under twenty," and only "a nice girl," are certainly well introduced by the author and inspire interest in their travels at once. In its holiday dress of thistle and rose covers, upon which six golden hearts gleam and glisten, the book is irresistible. Mr. Charles E. Brock, besides designing the binding, has done much in the way of illustrations, and for those who particularly recall his quaint portrayal of "Elia" last year, comment would be almost superfluous. His 108 pen and ink sketches throughout the two volumes are masterpieces of their kind. In the first volume Penelope relates in her "Commonplace Book" the English experiences of the three friends, first in the town and then the country, and in the second we again meet them in Scotland, first in Edinburgh at Court, wined and dined by the flower of Scottish nobility, and afterward at "Bide-a-Wee Cottage" in the picturesque little village of Pettybaw. Yet, through all their travels we scent the American woman's distinctive charm, her natural independence, and her abiding sense of humor. Who could ask more than the privilege of reading these two well-printed, charmingly illustrated volumes of the experiences, love affairs, and final settlement of all the difficulties of three such interesting characters?

THE CARDINAL'S SNUFF-BOX. By Henry Harland. Crown, 8vo. New York: John Lane, The Bodley Head. $1.50.

As Sidney Luska, Mr. Henry Harland first won his literary spurs, and over his own signature he seems equally able to hold them. Those who recall with pleasure the earlier fruits of his genius, among them "As It Was Written," "Yoke of the Torah," will find much of his old power with the additional charm of a more elaborate setting in "The Cardinal's Snuff Box." In this book, now in its eighth thousand, the author's horizon has visibly widened, his views of life have become more penetrating and deeper, and his style is more artistically mature. The Cardinal impresses us at once as a clever, lovable person, who good-naturedly sums up his own personality when he says "The Sacred College has fifty centres of gravity; I sometimes fear I am the centre of levity." Peter and his Duchess cannot be characterized as other than delightful from every point of view. All the minor characters are sketched in with perfect lifelikeness, and his descriptions, especially the one of an Italian garden, are both alluring and convincing. To tell the story would be to spoil the book of much of its charm, for in spite of the fact that we none of us admit to reading a novel solely for the plot, still there is no small pleasure attached to following an author in unraveling a clever one, and in this particular the readers of "The Cardinal's Snuff-Box" are not likely to be disappointed.

This new edition of Mr. Westcott's widely read story of American life in a small New York town has several features not found in the early editions. In the first place, we have a comprehensive biography of the author by Forbes Heermans; then there are some fine illustrations by two well-known artists. Most everybody who has read this book must have carried in the mind's eye some sort of portraits of the leading characters. It is doubtful if the interpretations of the text that have found expression through the pen and pencil of Messrs. Clinedinst and Farrand will disappoint many. They are in no wise ideal representations of what an idealist might imagine the characters to be, but they are intensely human. The full-page black-and-whites abound in action and reveal a fine enthusiasm for the story itself, while the pen and ink sketches which intersperse the text are full of character and provide a delightful supplement to the printed page—a relaxation, as it were, from lines with which more than half a million people are more or less familiar.

ALICE OF OLD VINCENNES. By Maurice Thompson. Illustrations by F. C. Yohn. 12mo. Indianapolis, Ind.: Bowen Merrill Company. $1.50.

If booksellers' sales may be accepted as good evidence, Mr. Maurice Thompson's "Alice of Old Vincennes" is likely to be one of the record breakers for the holidays. And the book fully deserves its popularity. There are life and spirit on every page. The action of the story taking place in 1778 or thereabouts, the tale takes upon itself a Revolutionary atmosphere and may well be included in that inner circle of historical romances which distinguish themselves from the general mass of that kind of literature now being published. Marching through its chapters with unceasing animation go soldiers, Indians, early French settlers of Indiana, a jovial, kind-hearted old priest, and a beautiful, noble young woman. There are hairbreadth escapes and intrigues, dangers galore, and plenty of love. In spite of the thickening of the plot one breathes the simplicity of those early times. Those were the days when life was full and earnest, but withal simple and true. The time for moralizing and philosophizing had not yet come. People were too busy living their lives to stop to wonder why they were doing it. As a writer of good romantic fiction, "Alice of Old Vincennes" alone would give Mr. Thompson entrée to the front ranks.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE WEDDING DAY IN LITERATURE AND ART. Compiled by C. F. Carter. A collection of the best descriptions of weddings from the works of the world's leading novelists and poets. Fully illustrated, with reproductions of famous paintings of incidents relating to the wedding day. 12mo. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.

Mr. C. F. Carter certainly hit upon an attractive and unique plan when he gathered together the descriptions of weddings by novelists and poets in all countries and incorporated them into one volume, including, as illustrations, reproductions of famous pictures by such painters as Fortuny, Hovenden, Leighton, Forbes, Rubens, Makowsky, and many others. There are chapters describing the "event of events" taken from many of our old favorites. The wedding of David Copperfield and Dora is given; there is that beautiful bit of word painting from "The Bride of Lammermoor"; Bella's marriage to John Rokesmith is there; George and Emmie, Lorna Doone, and Jane Eyre have all contributed to crowd the book with interest. From the poets he includes the wedding of Priscilla and John Alden, Jean Ingelow's beautiful "Like a Laverock in the Lift," together with innumerable poems, long and short, selected from Will Carleton, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Sir John Suckling, and others, the whole seeming to be introduced by the exquisite melody of Poe's "rhyming and the chiming of the bells." The book should certainly be of widespread interest, for, besides these old favorites we have mentioned, it contains extracts from many more equally as familiar, some that may have been almost forgotten, and some unknown to us at all, which we meet now for the first time at this most joyful of all ceremonies. The binding is in suitable style for is delightful: a title, and the letterpress is the work of the University Press.

THE GRAY FAIRY BOOK. By Andrew Lang. With 28 full-page plates and 27 illustrations in the text by H. J. Ford. Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, gilt edges. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $2.

For a number of years Mr. Andrew Lang has been making the holiday season all the happier by his books devoted to the fairies. As a folk-lorist Mr. Lang is thoroughly versed in all the legends of childhood. To him the theme, as he has shown it to us, is inexhaustable. Of course, his power of judgment is of the best, for he knows almost intuitively what will most please young people. In "The Gray Fairy Book" there are presented a number of new stories, at least novel to the young readers of to-day, but perhaps having their origin in the remotest antiquity. The book begins with "The Donkey Skin" and ends with "Brunella." One never can tell exactly on what a man's reputation depends. It may be that in time to come Mr. Andrew Lang will be classed with Perrault or the brothers Grimm. Well, that would be true fame, and a lasting one.

WILKINSON'S FOREIGN CLASSICS IN ENGLISH. By Prof. William Cleaver Wilkinson of the Chicago University. 6 vols., 12mo. Bound in olive-green cloth, with classic design on cover. New York: Funk & Wagnalls Company. $1. $6 per set. Sold separately.

In this series the design of Prof. Wilkinson is to furnish persons precluded from accomplishing a course of college training with the foreign classics. The subjects treated in the six volumes are the Greek, Latin, French, and German classics. There are then two volumes containing the preparatory and the college course in Greek, and the same in Latin. Taking Volumes I. and II. as examples, these contain, with the Greek reader, selections from Aesop's Fables, Xenophone's Memorabilia, inclusive; Xenophon's Anabasis, Homer's Illad, The Odyssey, and Aristotle. Taking the second volume, the authors treated are Herodotus, Aeschylus, Aristophanes, Simonides, Moschus, Thucydides, Sophocles, Pindar, Theocritus, Demosthenes, Plato, Euripides, Sappho, Bion, and Aeschines. The thoroughness of the author becomes evident when the volume of French classics is examined. The list of writers cited are Froissart, Rabelais, Montaigne, Molière, Pascal, Corneille, Racine, La Fontaine, Saurin, Fénélon, Le Sage, Montesquieu, Bossuet, Tocqueville, Voltaire, Rousseau, Mme. de Staël, Chateaubriand, Massillon, Béranger, Lamartine, Joubert, and many others. In the German classics there is the same amplitude of examples. The series will be found invaluable to those who are preparing for college, and for those who, having graduated, wish to keep their former studies in mind.

This handsome volume is devoted to the Biblical heroines. Eve has a chapter to herself, then follow the heroines of the Patriarchal era, of the Hebrew Nation, of the New Testament, and those of the Apocrypha. There are thirty-six illustrations, showing the masterpieces of the great painters. In the pictures there are the works of Rubens, Veronese, Murillo, Raphael, Giorgione, Carlo Dolce, Andrea del Sarto, Boticelli, with those of the modern masters, such as Henner, Hofmann, Delaroche, Lebrun, Piloty, Millais, and Doré. The author follows closely the history of art and the characteristics of the sacred pictures of all periods. Appreciations of the serpent are varied in a fairly amusing manner. The locality of the pictures is invariably cited, and a carefully arranged index is of marked advantage. Within a limited space, and in convenient form, Clara Erskine Clement has presented a valuable contribution to the history of sacred art.

Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, $1.25.

. . . a book that is brimful of the richest quality of pure Celtic humor. The fictitious duke gets into any number of scrapes, all of them laughable, but the real duke finds himself embarrassed by the immediate consequences and is forced at last to reclaim his title from the Irish adventurer. . . . The book, after keeping one convulsed for two hours with mingled smiles and broad laughter, ends happily and up to the standard of exacting convention.—Detroit JOURNAL.

IAN HAMILTON'S MARCH.

BY WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL, M. P.

Author of "From London to Ladysmith, via Pretoria." With Portrait of Lieut.-General Ian Hamilton. Maps and Plans of Battles. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

One of Winston Spencer Churchill's most interesting books.

It is written in his usual clear, vivid style, and has the advantage of presenting information which, though important, has not hitherto been given to the public, owing to the difficulty of communication on the march.

Described with vigor and spirit, some with striking eloquence, and incidentally an excellent idea of both of its opposing peoples is given.

"It is doubtless as impartial a presentation of this important chapter in the great war as could be given by any one person who was an eye witness."—Boston Beacon.

The Daily Telegraph: The book possesses merit of the very highest order.

Newark Daily Advertiser: It is the best book we have seen in respect to cover, contents, and cuts.

Burlington Free Press: Combines with a powerful love story to make the reader unwilling to stop reading till the last page has been reached.

Minneapolis Times: Well worth reading.

Books for Children.

TWENTY OF THE BEST AMONG RECENT ONES.

To name the best juvenile books of the season is a difficult and in some respects an ungracious task. There are so many points of view for the critic, and so great a variety of tastes to be considered on the part of readers. Yet, in making the following list of the twenty or more best books for young readers published this season, to any objector to the superlative it may at least be said that there are none better than the twenty to which attention is here given.

For the very littlest ones, the readers under ten, I may name as the best of all "The Adventures of Mabel," (Dodd, Mead & Co.) Although issued anonymously two or three years ago, as it now first appears with the name of its author, Prof. H. T. Peck, it is practically new. The adventures of Mabel are with animals, spiders, giants, and other creatures dear to the heart of children. The thought is clear, and the language suited to the thought.

In "The April Baby's Book of Tunes," (The Macmillan Company,) the author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden" plays just a trifle to the gallery. But, as mothers and aunts will often be called on to read this book to their little charges, it is well that some of the jokes should be adapted to their understanding. The tunes are charming accompaniments to "Polly Flinders" and "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary," and numerous other Mother Goose ballads, and the exquisite colored illustrations are by Kate Greenaway.

"The Road to Nowhere," (Harpers',) by Livingstone B. Morse, is dedicated to "Alice in Wonderland." From this it can be seen that the things that happened to Jack and Kittie must have been a little out of the ordinary. Without any difficulty they visit Cloud Land and the Rainbow Factory, and even the other side of the moon. They get considerable amusement on a Candy Farm and in the Museum of Compound Words. The story is delightfully told, and the illustrations are strikingly original.

"The Little Boy Book," by Helen Hay, takes the lead, perhaps, among the illustrated volumes of verse for youngest readers. (R. H. Russell & Co.)

Boys and girls a trifle older than the littlest ones will find in the "St. Nicholas Book of Plays and Operettas" (The Century Company) a rich mine of diversion for Winter evenings. There are shadow pantomimes, and a Mother Goose operetta, and a fancy masque and many other entertainments, some with and some without musical accompaniments, and all with a distinct literary value.

Among all the books for children from ten to fifteen there is nothing better than "Yankee Enchantments," by Charles Battell Loomis. (McClure, Phillips & Co.) Indeed, I do not know its equal in a certain droll imagination. It is made up of twenty short stories—modern fairy tales—with imitation liquid air, and trolley cars, and other up-to-date things in place of the machinery of ancient fairy lore. Bubbling with humor, perfectly wholesome in tone, it is a thoroughly delightful book. It is fully and effectively illustrated by F. Y. Cory.

"Edna and Her Brothers," by Eliza Orne White, (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,) is as humorous as any of Miss White's books for older people. It is the story of a girl who has to be almost a mother to her little brothers. For her mother is a painter, her father a sculptor, and their artistic temperament and Bohemian habits throw much responsibility on their young daughter.

"A Little American Girl in India," Harriet A. Cheever, (Little, Brown & Co.,) must be as entertaining to boys as to girls, for a little boy shares all the adventures of the young heroine, and their experiences are thoroughly entertaining.

Among the more serious books for boys and girls, "In the Days of Alfred the Great," by Eva March Tappan, (Lee & Shepard,) easily has first rank. It is a life of the renowned King, told in the form of a story. The early years of Alfred are painted more graphically than the latter part of his life. But the book has the charm of a good literary style and will prove both interesting and instructive.

"The Adventures of Odysseus," by F. S. Marvin, R. I. C. Mayer, and F. N. Stowell, (E. P. Dutton & Co.,) gives the substance of the Greek epic, retold in simple and clear language for young readers.

"The World of the Great Forest," by Paul du Chaillu, (Charles Scribner's Sons,) belongs to the same general class of improving books for younger readers. We are so sure of Mr. du Chaillu's knowledge of the distant regions of which he writes that we accept without hesitation his description of the habits and environment of African animals. We need not question too closely the manner in which the creatures of the forest talk to one another. For should they talk at all, probably they would talk just as Mr. du Chaillu makes them talk.

In pure fiction for boys, there is just one "best book" of the season, "For the Honor of the School," (D. Appleton & Co.,) by Ralph Henry Barbour, author of "The Half-Back." It tells of life at a boarding school for boys, and the delineation of boyish character is clear cut. The value of athletics in developing character is emphasized, and the tone of the story is excellent.

As a general thing the boy of to-day must find his fiction merely the gilding for a pellet of improvement. "The Treasury Club," by William Drysdale, (W. A. Wilder Company,) is one of the best of these informing stories. It is the first volume of the United States Government Series, and the boys who read it will get a vivid and correct view of the practical working of the Treasury Department of our National Government.

"The Noank's Log," by W. O. Stoddard, (Lothrop Company,) is one of the best of this year's Revolutionary tales. Its characters are living people rather than lay figures, and it holds the attention from beginning to end. The "Noank" is an American privateer, and some of her experiences are thrilling.

"A Godson of Lafayette" deals with happenings in the second quarter of the present century. Its author, Mr. Elbridge S. Brooks, is always very careful in his historical data, and he has woven an extremely interesting story around the career of the Rev. Eleazer Williams, the missionary to the Indians, whom many persons believed to be the Dauphin of France, son of Marie Antoinette and Louis XVI. (W. A. Wilde & Company.)

"Battling for Atlanta," by Byron A. Dunn, (A. L. McClurg & Co.,) is an excellent account of the Atlanta campaign, by one who was a part of what he describes. It is probable that no one youth ever had as many hairbreadth escapes as his young hero, Fred Shackleford, but at least they were all possible to an adventurous youth in the civil war.

"The Gold Seekers on the Dalton Trail," by Arthur R. Thompson, (Little, Brown & Co.,) is the best presentation that we have had of life in the Klondike. Two boys, with their father, make the journey to meet their uncle, and all their experiences are fully described. Numerous illustrations from photographs make the book very valuable.

The very best book for boys dealing with recent events is "With Lawton and Roberts," by Elbridge S. Brooks (Lothrop.) By an accident ingeniously devised his young hero is carried from the Philippines to South Africa, and thus has a chance to take part in two wars.

"The Moon Metal," by Garrett P. Serviss (Harper's) is not surpassed by any imaginative work of the present season. As a fancy or conceit it will appeal to older readers even more strongly than to the boys and girls for whom it was first intended.

Girls read boys' books, and for this reason books for girls are not numerous. "Sister's Vocation," by Josephine Dodge Daskam (Charles Scribner's Sons) gives its name to a volume of short stories for girls, which in every way is of the very highest order. Miss Daskam has the gift of style, and she writes of the follies and virtues of young girls with a sure hand.

"Her Very Best," by Amy E. Blanchard, (J. B. Lippincott Company,) and "Almost as Good as a Boy," by Amanda M. Douglas, (Lea & Shepard,) are for the older girls. The former tells of the life of a young girl studying art in New York; the second of the efforts of another young girl to become a business woman in order to assist her family. Both are of good tone.

There is a praiseworthy tendency in recent books both for boys and girls to dignify self-support.

HELEN LEAH REED.

The Pursuit of Happiness.

The Late Charles Dudley Warner in The Century.

Perhaps the most curious and interesting phrase ever put into a public document is "the pursuit of happiness." It is declared to be an inalienable right. It cannot be sold. It cannot be given away. It is doubtful if it could be left by will.

The right of every man to be six feet high and of every woman to be five feet four was regarded as self-evident, until women asserted their undoubted right to be six feet high also, when some confusion was introduced into the interpretation of this rhetorical fragment of the eighteenth century.

But the inalienable right to the pursuit of happiness has never been questioned since it was proclaimed as a new gospel for the New World. The American people accepted it with enthusiasm, as if it had been the discovery of a gold prospector, and started out in the pursuit as if the devil were after them.

If the proclamation had been that happiness is a common right of the race, alienable or otherwise, that all men are or may be happy, history and tradition might have interfered to raise a doubt whether even the new form of Government could so change the ethical condition. But the right to make a pursuit of happiness, given in a fundamental bill of rights, had quite a different aspect. Men had been engaged in many pursuits, most of them disastrous, some of them highly commendable. A sect in Galilee had set up the pursuit of righteousness as the only or the highest object of man's immortal powers. The rewards of it, however, were not always immediate. Here was a political sanction of a pursuit that everybody acknowledged to be of a good thing.

Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson's drawings of our native birds, which have been presented during the current year in The Youth's Companion, will shortly be presented by The Companion in permanent form. The drawings will be about two-thirds life size, each sheet measuring about 11x14 inches. The sheets will be detached in portfolio.

The Best Christmas Present For a Girl or Boy is a Year's Subscription to

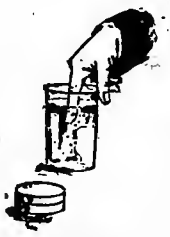
ST. NICHOLAS FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Writing to "St. Nicholas" About It.

It comes twelve times a year to remind the recipient of your love.

ST. NICHOLAS has been for nearly thirty years the leading children's magazine printed in the English language, and for several years past it has been the only periodical of its kind. There is an education that cannot be had at school and the text books do not teach,—this is the education of St. Nicholas. Familiarity with its pages, which contain the best in art and literature, educates children and, as was said many years ago, "civilizes the small boy."



An Experiment in Physics.

From "Nature and Science" in "St. Nicholas."

The Aim of "St. Nicholas"

is to help its readers as well as to entertain them, and the testimony comes from a legion of past St. Nicholas readers that the good it has done has been permanent. The special features of 1901 include serial stories by a great number of authors, stories of history, stories of the sea, and patriotic stories; with short stories by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Mrs. Peary, and others. Cleveland Moffett's stories of danger and daring will be a feature in 1901.

New Departments

NATURE AND SCIENCE

This new department is exciting the attention of educators everywhere; it contains short articles on animals, flowers, birds, insects, and that which has to do with nature. It answers questions put to it by young readers, and is edited from the standpoint of boys and girls by one who sympathizes with their way of enjoying nature. It is beautifully illustrated.

ST. NICHOLAS LEAGUE

is an organization of those who read the magazine (without dues), and it offers prizes each month for the best drawings, photographs, poems, stories, puzzles, and puzzle answers, also special prizes from time to time; and all contributions are impartially judged, with due allowance for the age of the contributor. Some of the work sent in by the young readers shows surprising talent.

BOOKS AND READING

helps the young folks to discriminate between the good and the bad in literature, and with the assistance of librarians, parents, teachers, and friends, it recommends lists of books for the reading of children.

The November and December numbers sent free of charge to new subscribers with a year's subscription, beginning with January, 1901.

On receipt of $3.00 we will send the November and December numbers of St. Nicholas, with a beautifully printed certificate (miniature reproduction herewith), to any person who wishes to use St. Nicholas as a Christmas Gift. The November and December numbers can be given at Christmas with the certificate, and the twelve months from January on will be sent directly to the recipient. Give us your own name and the name of the boy or girl to whom you wish the subscription sent to the Century Co., Union Square, New York.

NOTES ABOUT CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

AMONG all the books put forth for this holiday season, none will be more popular than Ernest Seton-Thompson's exquisite "Biography of a Grizzly." It is not only a delightful story, but it is published in such attractive form, with marginal illustrations and full-page pictures in tints, that it makes an ideal Christmas gift.

If you are looking for beautiful books issued at a low price, make a note of "The Century Classics," a new series of the world's best books, described in the advertisement on this page. Another beautiful series is the "Thumb-Nail Series," little books bound in stamped leather, each one of which is a thing of beauty. The new issues this season are "Epictetus," newly translated by Benjamin E. Smith; "Rab and His Friends," by Dr. John Brown, and "Motifs," by E. Scott O'Connor. There are also editions of "The Cricket on the Hearth," "Rip Van Winkle," etc., etc.

JOHN MORLEY'S Life of Cromwell will make a capital present for the lover of history. It is the book of the season in London and it is having a large sale there as well as in America. It is very beautifully issued, with pictures which make it valuable as well as interesting.

"COLONIAL DAYS AND WAYS," an authentic account of colony times, by Helen Evertson Smith, is especially adapted for a Christmas present to members of colonial and patriotic societies. A book for boys and girls of a similar character is "The Century Book of the American Colonies," issued under the auspices of the National Society of Colonial Wars, written by Elbridge S. Brooks, and very fully illustrated. "Hero Tales," by Governor Roosevelt and Senator Lodge, is another book that boys will enjoy.

DR. S. WEIR MITCHELL'S latest work is "Dr. North and His Friends." While it is in no way an autobiography, yet Dr. North is undoubtedly the medium through whom Dr. Mitchell relates many of his most remarkable experiences and impressions.

Dr. Mitchell's famous romance of the Revolution, "Hugh Wynne," has just been issued in single volume form at $1.50. There is also a sumptuous "extra illustrated" edition at $5.00, very suitable as a present to lovers of this delightful work.

THE new superbly illustrated edition of Hans Christian Andersen's Fairy Tales will appeal to thousands of people at the coming Christmas season. It is a magnificent book which could not have been made except with the co-operation of the Danish Government and leading publishers in at least half a dozen countries. The book must be seen at the book stores to be appreciated.

LOVERS of fiction will find "Deacon Bradbury" an acceptable book to give at Christmas. This is the work that some critics say is much like "David Harum," while others insist that no such likeness exists. "The Sword of the King," by Ronald MacDonald, is a very popular book just now, and Captain Joshua Slocum's "Sailing Alone Around the World" will make a delightful present for those who enjoy stories of adventure, especially if they like a touch of humor with it.

PAUL JONES NO PIRATE.

Near the close of his "Cromwell" Mr. John Morley has written a sentence that is a product either of gross ignorance, and Mr. Morley is not an ignorant man—or of a deliberate intention to blacken the memory of a man as little inferior in honor as he was in courage to the best and bravest England ever brought forth. Whether Mr. Morley wrote with knowledge or without it, he is alike unpardonable, and his words should be resented by every patriotic American, repudiated by every decent Briton. The shameful sentence ran:

> From the point of view of modern public law, the picture of the Council of State with Oliver at the head of the board, discussing the feasibility of seizing the West Indies, is like so many hearty corsairs with pistols, cutlasses, and boarding-caps, revolving their plans in the cabin of the Red Rover, or Paul Jones's Ranger.

This intimation that Paul Jones was a pirate simply perpetuates an old slander, utterly without foundation in fact, and its repetition to-day, when the truth about our great Commodore is hidden from none willing to see it, illustrates what is perhaps the most unlovely trait in British character. The Ranger was bought by and belonged to the United States Government; its commander was a regularly commissioned officer in the infant American Navy. These facts are or ought to be known to Mr. Morley. The temptation is strong; therefore, to assert that even now, when it is customary for historians to stick fairly well to the truth, and give men their due, irrespective of politics or national grudes, it is morally impossible for an Englishman, even an Englishman of Mr. Morley's intelligence, to make a passing reference to John Paul Jones without indulging in deliberate calumny. Mr. Morley is well read in history, and he therefore must be aware that never an act by Paul Jones, in his whole glorious career, either on shore or on the decks of his ships, gives the shadow of an excuse to any one for saying or hinting that he was a pirate. The one crime which he committed, and for which the English will never forgive him, was that of beating the English every time he ever met them, either by fighting or by strategy, and, worst of all, doing it time and again with an inferior force. They had to swallow their bitter pill at the time, but they have never missed an opportunity since to vilify and slander this first and greatest of American naval commanders. Even the great Kipling does it. Unfortunately, by this constant iteration, the impression has been widely disseminated, even in America, that, in spite of his heroic deeds and his undying fame, there was something wrong about Paul Jones, and that he was really little better than a privateersman.

In reality, after he left the merchant service he never set foot, except as a passenger, on other than strictly Government vessels, and, although urged repeatedly by the French to take command of privateering expeditions against the English, and though promised a large remuneration if he would do so, he indignantly rejected all such proposals. To the day of his death he asked nothing better than to uphold his country's honor, overlooking in his loyalty to the cause of freedom no little neglect and bad treatment at her hands.

If only to counteract the possible effect of that one slanderous sentence in Mr. Morley's biography, it is well worth while that an authentic account of Paul Jones's life should be read by every American, and by as many of the Queen's subjects as are willing to do so. Therefore, most oppertune is the issue in Appleton's "Great Commanders" series of Mr. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story of the famous sailor's career.

All who are familiar with Mr. Brady's previous work will know that the life of Paul Jones is a subject that would be sure to enlist his hearty sympathy and enthusiasm. His book shows the admirable effects of both, even if it is not all that could be desired in some other respects. Mr. Augustus C. Buell's presentment of Paul Jones's life, issued earlier in the year, was so splendid an achievement in spirit, detail, and historical accuracy that to one who has read that marvelously valuable, interesting, and thrilling narration, Mr. Brady's does not make the same appeal that it might to another. Both authors, of course, narrate much the same facts, but there are a clearness and precision, a perfect comprehension of act and motive, in Mr. Buell's work which are not so evident in the other. Indeed, there are several instances in which Mr. Brady makes complicated explanations which not only do not explain, but which are obviously wrong. The most noticeable error of this kind is his attempt to reveal when and why John Paul changed his name to John Paul Jones. Mr. Brady uses three and one-half pages of his narrative and six pages of his appendix, trying to prove that John Paul adopted the name of Jones for the queer reason that he ardently admired a Mrs. Wylie Jones of North Carolina, in whose home he was once a visitor. Mr. Buell in much less space shows by legal documents still in existence that William Paul, who went to Virginia many years before his brother John, was adopted by one William Jones, a Scotch American planter on the Rappahannock, and that later John Paul, by the will of the old planter, was made residuary legatee of his brother in case the latter should die without issue, provided John Paul would assume, as his brother had done, the patronymic of Jones. This John Paul did in 1769, and thus, for totally unsentimental reasons, he was ever afterward to be John Paul Jones.

Another mistake of Mr. Brady's may be cited, and that is his surprising belief in the legend, refuted alike by reason and authoritative evidence, that when surrendering the Serapis Capt. Richard Pearson tendered his sword with the remark, "I regret as being compelled to strike to a man who has fought with a halter around his neck." Mr. Brady not only inserts this in his text without qualification, but in a foot note asserts his belief in its authenticity in spite of all the doubts cast upon it.

Mr. Buell gives entire a letter written by Paul Jones himself to a New York newspaper which had published the halter story, and explains the matter in his usual simple manner, that is, by giving the actual facts instead of an ingenious explanation of what might have occurred. The parts of the letter bearing on this much disputed point are worth quoting. They are as follows:

> Permit me to assure you, Sir, upon my honor, that nothing of the kind occurred. It could not, in the nature of things have occurred. The statement ascribes to Capt. Pearson language most grossly unofficerlike and most painfully ungentlemanlike at a moment and on an occasion rigorously demanding the most delicate courtesy of intercourse. * * * * Now, permit me, Sir, to explain the possible origin of the story. In his statement at his court martial Capt. Pearson said: "The extraordinary and unheard of desperate stubbornness of my adversary had so depressed the spirits of my people that, when more than two hundred had been slain or disabled out of three hundred and seventeen all told, I could not urge the remnant to further resistance." Then the Judge Advocate asked: "To what, Capt. Pearson, do you attribute this extraordinary and unheard-of stubbornness?"
> Capt. Pearson's reply was: "I do not know, Sir, unless it was because our Government in its inscrutable wisdom, had allowed, if it did not cause, the impression to be spread abroad that Capt. Jones and his crew would be held pirates, or at least, not entitled to the usages of civilised war."
> To that the Judge Advocate rejoined: "In other words, Capt. Pearson, you mean they fought like men fighting with ropes round their necks."
> "That might be a way to state what I mean," said Capt. Pearson.

Two incidents are related in Mr. Brady's book which well illustrate the different methods of warfare pursued by Paul Jones and the British, and are a good commentary on their fondness, even at the present time, for applying to him the epithat of "pirate. Soon after Jones's appointment as an officer in the navy, and while he was absent on a cruise in the Providence, the British and Tories under Lord Dunmore ravaged his plantation in Virginia, burning all his buildings, demolishing his wharf, killing his live stock, and sending off to be sold in Jamaica every one of his able-bodied slaves, thus depriving him of all resources except the very uncertain remuneration from the Government. This was the way the gallant British undertook to avenge the seizure of a few of their transports by Capt. Jones in fair war on the open sea.

Some years later, when cruising in the Ranger, Jones, who was in the neighborhood of St. Mary's Isle, the seat of the Earl of Selkirk, conceived the plan of seizing the Earl and holding him as hostage or exchanging him for some prominent American prisoner, with the thought that he would thus compel the British to recognize the principle of exchange. He did land on the island, but, hearing that Lord Selkirk was not at home, ordered his men to return at once to the Ranger. The crew, already in a mutinous state, rebelled and demanded that they be allowed to follow the example set by the British all along the American coast. We learn from Mr. Brady's narrative that Paul Jones, under compulsion, finally agreed that they should demand the family plate, but he insisted that they should not enter the hall, molest any of the inmates, or appropriate anything not given to them. His orders were carried out to the letter, and later the scrupulous Commodore purchased the silver, when it was sold through the prize court, and with great expense and difficulty returned it to the Countess of Selkirk. This was the only occasion upon which Paul Jones gave any sort of countenance to waging war upon peaceable citizens, and he certainly amended his fault with the most quixotic chivalry. The English never paid him for the destruction of his plantation.

Readers of this article may think that too large a part of it has been devoted to Mr. Morley and Mr. Buell, and too little to its proper subject, Mr. Brady's book. The excuse is that Mr. Morley's remark was cited as showing the crying need for just such a book as Mr. Brady's life of Paul Jones, even if Mr. Buell's fine work did precede it by a few weeks. Those who are not quite willing to have all the glamour removed from their heroes and to see their thoughts and deeds divested of everything but truth may, perhaps, think Mr. Brady a better historian than Mr. Buell. It would do no one harm to read both, and indeed there are several documents found in Mr. Brady's account that were unwisely omitted from Mr. Buell's.

Nonsense Riddles.

From The London Globe.

A correspondent sends us—"as the outcome of a long course of arduous study under the best masters"—a tautological riddle. "Why did the bull-rush? Because he saw the cowslip. Why did the cowslip? Because she trod in a butter-cup." The continuance of the riddle we leave to other correspondents. We believe it has no end.

LITERARY LANDMARKS.

Books That Have Made Great Names in This Century.

In the current number of The Outlook is a series of articles giving what in the opinion of ten men of experience and judgment are the "greatest" ten books of the century now drawing to its close, or those "which have most influenced its thoughts and activities." The men whose opinion is thus set forth are James Bryce, author of "The American Commonwealth"; Edward Everett Hale, Henry van Dyke, Professor of English Literature at Princeton University; the Rev. Dr. George A. Gordon, pastor of the New Old South Church, Boston; Arthur T. Hadley, President of Yale University; the Rev. Dr. A. M. Fairbairn, Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford; G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University; William De Witt Hyde, President of Bowdoin College; William J. Tucker, President of Dartmouth College, and Thomas Wentworth Higginson, the well-known New Englander.

This attempt to formulate a criticism of the century's literature is most interesting from many points of view, and is perhaps as conclusive as such a thing can be when we consider who the critics are and estimate the value of their opinions. Their agreements and differences are both worth reading. In the following lines we have presented a paraphrased résumé of the articles which in The Outlook, omitting the illustrations, occupy fourteen columns.

Mr. Bryce places first on the list Darwin's "Origin of Species," "a treatise which has done more to turn the current of speculative thought in general, as well as to cast light on the most difficult problems of natural history, than any other within the last hundred years." Next come Goethe's "Faust" and Hegel's "History of Philosophy," as perhaps the most widely known and widely influential. Wordsworth's poetry has done more than any other to inspire the growing love of nature and appreciation of natural beauty which belong to this century, and out of his poems one may take "The Excursion" as preeminent in doing this work. In a different sphere, Mazzini's "Duties of Man" told powerfully on thought during the forty years which followed the beginning of his literary career. Karl Marx's treatise called "Das Kapital" became, soon after its publication, a sort of Bible for the Socialists of Continental Europe. De Maistre's "Le Pape" played an important part in its time in propagating a set of views which have had much currency in Italy as well as in France, and have contributed to the Catholic reaction in England also. Tocqueville's "Democracy in America" produced an immense effect upon students of the political and social sciences when it appeared. Malthus's "Population" marks an epoch in the science of political economy. Among the great writers of fiction the first place probably belongs either to Victor Hugo or to Count Lyof Tolstoi, and if any one book is to be selected as a specially conspicuous for the influence it has had on men's thoughts and emotions, Hugo's "Les Misérables" would seem to have the strongest claim.

Edward Everett Hale says that probably Goethe's "Faust," "Wilhelm Meister," the "Elective Affinities," and the "Morphology" have affected the author's time more than his other publications, some of which he thought more serious. "I like to remember that I bought the 'Origin of Species' in the first edition in London in 1859. I knew as well then as I know now that the book ought to be written. No one in England would accept De Tocqueville's 'Democracy in America' as one of the central books. All the same I think it is. Bryce's 'American Commonwealth' may be classed with it. John Ruskin undoubtedly outlived his reputation. I still think his book on the 'Modern Painters' sent young men and young women out from their houses into the open air and made them read clouds, trees, vapors, and mountains as they had not read them before. Emerson, so far as preaching goes, is the preacher to the English and American world today. We owe to him an immense advance in the religion of our time. Now, as to Scott and Victor Hugo. It is the fashion just now to talk of Scott as if he were only a scene painter or a stage mechanic. This is sheer nonsense. In an age which knew nothing of history, Scott made dead people live and move and have a being. Of Victor Hugo, in a mitigated way, I might say the same thing. The value of Alfred Tennyson's book, 'In Memoriam,' will be stated in different ways by different people. For me, I am very sorry that his son has ever written his father's life. I think he has lifted him down two or three steps on the pyramid on which he had a right to stand. As to Renan, I do not say that his 'Life of Jesus' is the most important book in the uplifting of the Gospel study in this century. But it is the book which has awakened the most thought and is most widely known."

1. "Lyrical Ballads, with Wordsworth's preface of 1800, which marked the beginning of a new era of simplicity, sincerity, humanity, and liberty in English poetry.
2. "Waverley," the novel in which Scott showed the noble possibilities of fiction, raising it to the dignity of a fine art, and making it minister, in the broadest sense, to the enrichment and elevation of life.
3. "Aids to Reflection," in which Coleridge brought philosophy to the illumination of religion, and strengthened faith, not by suppressing thought, but by deepening it.
4. "Sartor Resartus," in which Thomas Carlyle sounded the battle-cry of his long and great warfare against the idolatry of shams.
5. Emerson's "Essays," in which he led the young and brave-hearted up to the mountain tops of truth and beauty and freedom, and bade them live by their visions, not by their misgivings.
6. Ruskin's "Modern Painters," in which he spoke the "open, sesame!" to a new treasury, not only of art, but also of books, and of nature, and of human life.
7. "A System of Logic," in which John Stuart Mill gave to the surviving elements of utilitarianism their most clear and reasonable statement, and provided arms for a succeeding generation of agnostics.
8. Sir William Hamilton's edition of the "Works of Reid," in which the loftiest philosophy of idealism was defended and expounded on the basis of "common sense," and a new impulse was given to those "who would live in the spirit."
9. "The Origin of Species," in which Charles Darwin give lucidity and coherence to the conception of a progressive and continuous creation, which has changed the face of the modern scientific world.
10. "In Memoriam," in which Tennyson expresses the victory of spiritual faith over honest doubt, and set to music the creed of immortal love.

Here is Mr. Gordon's list:

1. Goethe's "Faust," as the supreme artistic expression of the agnostic mood, of the ever-recurring tragedy of love, and of love's redemptive power.
2. Hegel's "Logic," for its unequaled influence in philosophy, theology, history, and criticism.
3. Carlyle's "French Revolution," for its exhibition of moral law operating through the endless confusions of a vast historic crisis.
4. Tennyson's "In Memoriam," as the century's most comprehensive and impressive utterance of doubt and faith concerning life after death.
5. Darwin's "Origin of Species," as achieving a revolution of human opinion on its subject, and as preparing the way for a new conception of the physical advent of man.
6. Comte's "Social Philosophy," under the influence of his positivism, as inspiring the religion of humanity.
7. Webster's "Speeches," as a mine of political wisdom, and a record of determinative intellectual power in National life.
8. Emerson's "Essays," as a protest against blind tradition and as an expression of high spiritual insight.
9. Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," as the epic of an outraged race; as an appeal to the conscience, first of America and then of the civilized world; as an invocation of humanity against inhumanity.
10. T. H. Green's "Introduction to Hume," as the first complete answer in English to empiricism, as honestly accomplishing the defeat of the fundamental enemy of theism, social ethics, and personality.

President Hadley says: "The books chosen in answer to this question must be selected for their results rather than for their merits. They should be the ones which have had the largest measurable effect on the world's thought and civilization." Hence he restricts himself to the following groups:

The first group (from 1804 to 1824) consists of Napoleon's "Civil Code," Goethe's "Faust," Hegel's "Encyclopaedia of the Philosophical Sciences," Schopenhauer's "World as Will," and Froebel's "Education of Man." The second (1849 to 1863) group includes Sainte-Beuve's "Mondays," Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Spencer's "Principles of Psychology," Darwin's "Origin of Species," and Renan's "Life of Jesus."

The absolutely sure names in this list are Goethe and Darwin; the most doubtful ones seem to me to be Sainte-Beuve and Renan, whose influence, though widespread and profound, was essentially transitory. Much is to be said for the substitution in place of either of Balzac's "Comédie Humaine."

Dr. Fairbairn makes several subordinate lists, but places the following in the first rank: Kant "Critique of Pure Reason," Hegel's "Wissenchraft der Logik," Sir William Grove's "Correlation of the Physical Forces," Charles Darwin's "Origin of the Species," Champollion's "De l'écriture hiératique des anciens Egyptiens," together with the "Lettre à M. Dacier," Niebuhr's "Römische Geschichte," Wordsworth's "Lyrical Ballads," Scott's "Waverley," Strauss's "Leben Jesu." For the rest, I would be inclined to divide my homage between (1) Schleiermacher, who did so much to rehabilitate religion as distinguished from philosophy, and (2) Thomas Chalmers, who had the courage to apply Christianity to our serious industrial and commercial problems, and also to give the most splendid illustration our century contains of the inability of civil law to regulate and to command the life with which God has inspired His Church."

President Hall says: "I should place first Darwin's 'Origin of Species,' which in a way implied his later 'Descent of Man,' because the whole evolutionary movement took its rise from these more than any others." Hegel's "Logic" deserves a place, because in it culminated the thought of a man who dominated all academic departments during the second quarter of the century, and its influence is still potent in England and America; Strauss's "Life of Jesus," so far as it drew the conclusions of the Tübingen school and stirred religious and theological thought profoundly; Horace Mann's "Educational Reports," are the fountain head of a reform that gave us the graded school system; "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was another of the most effective books of the century. As a specialist, who may be pardoned for what is perhaps an overvaluation of things in his ken, I should place Helmholtz's work on "Auditory Sensation." With some hesitation I would add Carlyle's "French Revolution"; Goethe's "Faust" is a work that looms up, as I read it year by year, as a monumental landmark. If influential books may be stretched to include all a man's works, I should place Wagner in this list, because he re-edited the myths which constitute the best parts of the ethnic Bible of his race and brought them home to the heart by the charm of a new musical method. Lastly, I would add Ibsen as the dramatist of the future, who, I think, has done more than any man now living to exalt the work of the artist.

Mr. Hyde's list follows:

1. Hegel's "Logic," which taught that all that is derives its being from the Conscious Mind in whom "all thinking things, all objects of all thought," inhere.
2. Comte's "Positive Philosophy," which turned men's thought from speculation about extraneous causes of social conditions to a study of the conditions themselves.
3. Lyell's "Principles of Geology," which explained the configuration of the earth by forces now in operation, thus bringing inorganic matter within the realm of rational law.
4. Darwin's "Origin of Species," which banished special creation and enthroned Immanent Reason supreme throughout the cosmic process.
5. Spencer's many-volumed "Synthetic Philosophy," which, though on dubious metaphysical foundations, has reared a formula applicable to every province of matter and every problem of mind, thus fulfilling with marvelous richness of detail Hegel's prophetic outline of a universe reduced to the unity of one comprehensive idea.
6. Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus," which smashed the shams of hereditary custom and convention, setting up present worth and power to do the duty of the hour as the genuine heroism and the true nobility.
7. Emerson's "Essays," which renounced allegiance to all external claims of gods and men and institutions, save such as win the spontaneous sanction of the Universal Spirit which dwells in each individual breast.
8. Ruskin's "Modern Painters," teaching with stern ethical sincerity, as the recently erected tablet in Westminster Abby says of him, "To hold in loving reverence the poor man and his work, the great man and his work, and God and His work."
9. Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which made the wrongs of the oppressed so vivid, and the brotherhood of the lowliest so real, that no sacrifice was too great to pay for their release.
10. Browning's "Poems," which teach to the influential few who read them the infinite significance of every concrete situation.

President Tucker says: "One cannot go far in attempting to answer the question as to the ten influential books of the century without becoming involved in secondary questions. * * * Assuming that the question applies to books rather than to authors, and that the influential book, if it does not at once affect the public mind, must be able to reach through the few to the many, I name the following books, though I should not be willing to defend the list at all points against competitors. A change in the angle of vision would vary somewhat the result: 'Faust,' Hegel's 'Philosophy of Religion,' 'Les Misérables,' 'The Origin of Species,' Strauss's 'Life of Jesus,' 'Sartor Resartus,' Spencer's 'Social Statics,' 'In Memoriam,' 'The Scarlet Letter,' 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'"

Mr. Higginson wrote, in part: "Setting aside Goethe, who belongs rather to the previous century, I think that one must go back to Scott (1) as the leading influence of the first half of the nineteenth century. Yet when we turn to Heine (2) we come to the man above all others who has influenced, more than any English writer, the modern style in literature. He alone proved it possible to be French and German in one, to mingle the brilliancy of one nation with the penetrating thought of the other. Turning now to poetry, we see that Wordsworth, (3,) whom Southey patronized and Byron ridiculed, was creative in the best sense, because he created his own fame. When we turn to the abstract philosophers, we must dismiss Kant, like Goethe, as belonging rather to the previous century, and name by preference Hegel, (4,) the last of the great quartet of German metaphysicians. Turning finally to those who have dealt with social questions, it seems to me that Robert Owen, (5) as the direct source of the modern co-operative method, must be named in preference to those, who, like Saint-Simon, first launched Socialism into the air. Passing now into the second half of the century, the name of Darwin (6) of course leads all others, and nearest to him comes Emerson, (7,) not merely from depth of thought, but from the extraordinary way in which his influence has permeated literature, so that one may pick up a book that seems wholly remote from him in tone and theme and still find him unexpectedly quoted. Fiction is now largely taken possession of literature, and if the ultimate aim of fiction is, as it should be, to create the characters which come closest to nature, the first rank must be given to Tolstoi (8.) I should place Hawthorne (9) next to him, or in one aspect above him, as working in a higher atmosphere through the construction of types and figures, which, though never actually human, take an unequaled hold on the imagination; and I should close with Browning (10) as surpassing all other poets in wealth and in range, and as equaling the highest, sometimes, in melody. To sum up, my list of the leading intellectual influences for the last century would be as follows: For the first half of the century, Scott, Heine, Wordsworth, Hegel, and Owen; for the second half, Darwin, Emerson, Tolstoi, Hawthorne, and Browning."

To "Save the Face!"

From Notes and Queries.

To "save the face," and its converse, to "lose face," are common expressions in "pidgin English." If a Chinaman, of whatever standing, suffers in reputation or position by punishment, reprimand, or slights before inferiors, &c., in the words of himself and his friends he "loses face." As to the first expression, a little episode that I witnessed years ago may explain it. A friend of mine was kicking (figuratively) his "boy" out of the house, on an accusation of stealing, before his coolies, when the accused turned on his master and threatened to get "plenty dollah" out of him at the court for libel. My "boy," who was present, observed to me, "He makee save face," waiving altogether the question of guilt or innocence.

HOME LIFE IN COLONIAL DAYS.

"It is rare to find the patience and genius for detail requisite to such work as this coupled with real literary ability and the trick of apt expression. The author in this case has both. ELIZABETH AND HER GERMAN GARDEN,

With illustrations, is one of the new forms in which this charming idyl appears, and it will be heartily welcomed, for it supplies through admirable photogravures views of the stone house by the Baltic, of the comfortable library, the quaint village street, the church and, of course, the famous garden and not-to-be-forgotten babies. A New Juvenile by Mrs. Mabel Osgood Wright.

WABENO, THE MAGICIAN

Both boys and girls of about twelve enjoy it hugely. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

THE DREAM FOX STORY BOOK

is a child's book, but it appeals strongly throughout to older readers, and its 80 drawings by OLIVER HERFORD have evidently been made with a keen appreciation of its delightful nonsense, even "quainter, queerer and jollier," says The Outlook, than the fun in "Tommy-Anne and the Three Hearts." The tots are appealed to in its personification of nursery toys, while their elders will enjoy new light on the origin of golf and much else. Sq. 16mo, $1.50 net.

TOMMY-ANNE AND THE THREE HEARTS

"has had a remarkable success . . . and it has well deserved it," says The Transcript, Boston, of this bewitching nature-story for both girls and boys of ten or twelve. "A better gift book for the little folks could hardly be." (American.) Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

"A Great Romance. The adventures of that true knight of New World Chivalry, Rufus Gillespie, make a prose epic. A story of love and adventure, of chivalry, conflict and conquest. There is also the pathos that tugs at the heart strings long after we lay down the book. It recalls "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," and contains the atmosphere, vigor and charm of Washington Irving and Francis Parkman. The author has succeeded in writing a romance without mis-writing history. There has been a great output of historical novels during the last few years, many of them tempting us to say, as did the curate in Don Quixote, 'Out of the window with it,' but this we desire to keep inside and read as long as the window holds its light for our eyes."—Charles Morse, Supreme Court, Ottawa.

LITERARY RAMBLES.

The fourth volume of Dr. Wolfe's pilgrimages to the homes of famous authors on both sides of the water, "Literary Rambles at Home and Abroad" has just appeared, its contents being equally divided between the two countries.

The American portion of the present volume contains five chapters devoted to a description of the homes and personality of many of the authors whose homes are or have been in the localities included in his scope of the present volume.

The first chapter treats of the Hudson River—first touching upon the debt this river owes to the tales of Cooper, which centre around its upper course, while to Washington Irving, more than to any other one individual, does the lower Hudson owe its chief literary associations.

Dr. Wolfe's volumes contain a wealth of information, gathered, be tells us, from repeated or prolonged visits to the localities described, as well as from personal intercourse or correspondence with the authors mentioned, or with their friends or descendants.

In writing of the Hudson, Dr. Wolfe touches upon its association with others of our older writers—Poe, Sands, Halleck, Cozzens, Artemus Ward, Mrs. Southworth, and many others. Yonkers contains the home of the venerable William Allen Butler, whose poems were once so famous, and whose "Flora McFlimsey" will long remain immortal. So mile by mile Dr. Wolfe follows the course of our great river, telling us of all the writers, great and small, living or dead, whose homes are or have been along its shores. A few of the other topics treated will be seen by the following names: Audubon, Bangs, Dr. Shaw, Winston Churchill, the Warner sisters, Bigelow, Morris, Willis, Roe, Mrs. Barr, Headley, Verplanck, Paulding, Ichabod Crane, John Burroughs, and many others. The second chapter, "A New Jersey Ramble," treats, first of all, of the literary landmarks to be found in and around one of the last of American cities one would associate with letters; and yet the Gilders and Stephen Crane were employed upon The Newark Daily Advertiser, while Richard Watson Gilder established the now defunct Newark Morning Register, which was afterward edited by Thomas Dunn English. For this paper Miss Jeannette Gilder, the "Lounger" of The Critic, wrote her first newspaper article; here, too, lived and worked Dr. English and Dr. Coles, a friend of Whittier and Holmes, the author of numerous versions of the Dies Irae and Stabat Mater. The same city contains a church in which George Whitefield once preached during Aaron Burr's pastorate, the real founder and first President of Princeton College, and here its first eight commencements were held. Near this church is President Burr's old homestead, to which he brought his bride, the daughter of the author of "Edwards on the Will," after a courtship of three days, and here was born the Aaron Burr who fills so important a place in the history of our country. Stedman lived in Newark for many years, and here many of his best essays and poems were written, as well as a large portion of his "Victorian Poets." Many other Newark writers are included, such as Mary Mapes Dodge, Elizabeth Clementine Kinney, an intimate friend of the Brownings, who spent much time with them at Florence; Frank Forrester, and Henry William Herbert, as well as a host of others.

The third chapter is particularly interesting, in that it follows the career of Frank Stockton from his first home, in Rutherford—the scene of his delightful "Rudder Grange"—through all his changes of residence, including a full account of his personality and literary work, down to his final settlement in a beautiful old Colonial mansion of buff-colored brick, once standing in the midst of an estate of 3,000 acres, formerly owned by Washington. Stockton now owns the 150 acres surrounding this beautiful old house, a picture of which forms the frontispiece to the present volume. The house was planned by Washington, erected by his grand-nephew, and named Claymont, after a Washington homestead in England. The house is in West Virginia, and stands at the western base of the Blue Ridge, overlooking the Shenandoah Valley, his residence in this beautiful locality suggesting to him the name "Shenandoah Edition" for the new library edition of his works lately published.

The haunts of Walt Whitman form the subject of the next chapter, which contains much out-of-the-way information about the good gray poet, such as an account of the lonely farm on Timber Creek where in all seasons he resorted to spend "dear soothing, healthy, restoration hours"; much of his "Specimen Days" and "November Boughs" having been written here among the scenes the pages picture. His Camden houses, and the home of Mrs. Davis, his old housekeeper, and that of Horace Traubel, long his intimate friend and now his literary executor, are also described, the latter containing numerous valuable relics of the poet, including his own soiled and worn copy of "Leaves of Grass," with marginal notes and other memoranda and corrections in Whitman's autograph. This chapter also contains an illustration of Whitman's last resting place—a vault which is literally "in the woods" he so loved.

The last chapter in the American portion of the book pictures for us the literary associations which cling around the Delaware River, Cooper's ancestry, and his own birthplace; Hopkinson, Paine, Dr. Abbott, and "Clementine" Howarth, who, while bravely supporting a family of seven by caning chairs, wrote "Watching the Stars," "The Passion Flower," "The Olive Star," "Song of the Saints," and other beautiful lyrics.

Space forbids any detailed mention of the English section of the present volume, which treats of the associations centring around Stratford, of Byron's Harrow and Kensal Green, as well as of the Mary Charworth episodes, and a description and view of Hacknall Church, where Byron was buried.

A succeeding chapter treats of the Ayrshire Burns land, while even more interesting will be found the chapter devoted to the lake country, containing a pretty view of Dove Cottage. The thousand and one literary associations of the lake country are touched upon: "A small district to hold so large a place in the world of letters, but its diminutive area contains every element and variety of perfect scenery—rugged mountain mass and peaceful vale, rocky glen and flower-fringed stream, wild tarn and placid pool, savage seam and sunny mead—and it is to this completeness and diversity that the region owes its place in song and story. These are the charms which have drawn hither the many shining ones whose lives and work have contributed to make every rod of these landscapes classic ground."

A hint of the richness of this chapter may be obtained by a glance over a few of the subjects treated: Jane Eyre's "Lowood," Wilson and Elleray, Harriet Martineau, the Arnolds, and Fox How, Rydal Mount and Dove Cottage, Wordsworth and De Quincy, Grasmere, Ruskin's "Brantwood," Shelley's cottage, Coleridge, Southey, and a host of others.

The book is attractively printed and bound, and embodies the result of many an extended pilgrimage. It would form an admirable guide book for others who are able to thus follow in the footsteps of our best writers, and for this and other reasons should find numerous readers.

*LITERARY RAMBLES AT HOME AND ABROAD. By Theodore F. Wolfe, M. D., Ph. D., author of "A Literary Pilgrimage," "Literary Shrines," "Literary Haunts and Homes," &c. 16mo. Four illustrations. Pp. 215. Philadelphia and London: J. B. Lippincott Company. 1901. $1.25.

The Bonaventure Exhibition of Bookbindings.

The ninth annual exhibition of fine bindings and rare books at the Bonaventure Galleries was opened on Wednesday, Dec. 5, and will continue for one week. Some 300 volumes were on view, of which 85 are figured and described in a neat catalogue. A number of the books come here direct from the Paris Exposition, where Mr. Bonaventure received a medal for his display of bindings.

Among the complete sets of Tennyson were poems of 1830, bound "sur brochure" by Chambolle in pale blue morocco. Doublé in lemon Levant morocco, tooled with rose motifs. Poems of 1833, bound by Lortic in apple green morocco, tooled with filets. Doublé in old rose with arabesque border. The Romances Mises en Musique par Queen Hortense was bound by Canape. The Doublé was exquisitely tooled as if engraved in silver with violet inlays and gold bees. The whole was in a special morocco case and was extra illustrated. Pomey contributed a binding of Andrew's "Portraiture of the American War." It was done in old red morocco, in the centre of the front cover of which there is a panel upon which is reproduced a portrait of Washington in chiseled leather. A fine example of the work of Bedford appeared in a copy of the Kilmarnock Burns of 1786. About fifty examples of the work of the Guild of Woman Bookbinders admirably showed what women can do in the way of the binding of books. The original letters written by the Empress Josephine to the Count de Lavallette proved perhaps the gem of the collection, as bound by Chambolle, with an original miniature of the Empress on the cover, which was also embellished with magnificent tooling. Zaehnsdorf sent over twenty, and fine examples came from the Vale and the Kelmscott Press publications.

Of the latter was a copy of Keats, in two volumes, in brown levant morocco with a fine Padeloup dentille border. A masterpiece of Zaehnsdorf was a folio volume of "Histoire de la Bibliophile," consisting of historic bindings, engraved by Jacquemart, bound in green levant morocco and tooled in la Gascon style. A particularly fine example of pyrographic binding was that of "Peg Woffington" by F. J. Pfeister, in which Mr. Pfeister had introduced a fine etched portrait of Augustin Daly. "Mary Stuart," by John Skelton, was bound by Stikeman in red morocco lined with blue, which was adorned with emblematic tooling, introducing thistles and fleur-de-lis. Stikeman also bound "Nell Gwyn" in violet morocco with Cupid tool marks. Bindings by Ruban, David, Mercier, and Cuzan were also well represented by examples of La Société des Amis des Livres and other illustrated éditions de luxe, such as Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac," &c., in which the blending of the illustrations and interior decorations are rivals with the bindings.

A limited edition of 100 numbered copies of "Old Touraine, the Life and History of the Famous Chateaux of France," in two volumes, by Theodore Andrea Cook, B. A., has just been issued from the press of James Pott & Co. This work is one of the artistic publications of the season, bound in vellum, with gold decorated side and back, illustrated with photogravures on Japan paper, text printed on Old Stratford antique, deckle edge. It is a work to attract all book lovers. Three-quarters of the edition was sold before the book was published.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

Mrs. Sherwood's Personal Recollections of the Composer.

He was not "Sir Arthur," when I first saw him, leading the orchestra at a Royal Albert Hall Amateur Orchestra. He was only Mr. Arthur Sullivan, the idol of those who loved his songs, and very much respected by Church and State. His delightful songs and his "hymn tunes" had given him a strong hold on those who loved Handel and Haydn and who appreciated the delicate genius which even thirty years ago had made itself known to all England and America.

When it came to pass that I met him in his second genesis, at a fashionable supper in New York, after acting and hearing him lead off in the "Pirates," in that eventful season when he and Gilbert came to New York to make us laugh, I felt as if I had met John Wesley playing in private theatricals, and I told him so. He laughed heartily.

"Ah!" said he, "you remind me of a Western lady who came over on the steamer with me and asked me if I did not dislike 'to go to work for Mr. Gilbert,' after writing 'hymn tunes' so long, and 'after playing and singing for the Queen' in her own church."

"I told her, I did," and here he gave a squint at Mr. Gilbert, who was at the table; "I told her I felt very much disgraced, to have to work for Mr. Gilbert, but that he was very good pay, and that I was a poor man."

There was never any let-up of the jokes between the two; Gilbert as surly as Arthur Sullivan was bright and joyous, (where Gilbert kept his fun it was hard to find out,) but with the gay little dark-brown man it was evident that Southern blood danced in his veins.

"The Pirates" had an instantaneous success, with Sullivan to lead the orchestra and Gilbert to drill and abuse the chorus girls. The town was on fire to see and hear the rehearsals and, somehow, it did not seem a difficult thing to achieve. I know that I saw many of them, and came to have a feeling of intimacy with the singers. "Look at that man," said Mr. Sullivan, pointing to a basso, "what a splendid artist he is, and yet he gets so drunk we have to pay his salary to his wife."

It didn't please him to hear that "Pinafore" was a greater favorite than "The Pirates" could ever be. One lady said to him: "An opera which was performed in seventy different places in the United States, 'which gave pleasure to Sunday schools and to country faire' and to groups of people who never had been to a great city nor heard a set of professionals, must be a very great work of genius. It is Shakespearean, it touches the great popular heart. It is an immortal achievement."

Arthur Sullivan's face grew radiant. He could not but be pleased at such a thoroughly heartfelt tribute. "I begin to believe," said he, "that 'Pinafore' was written over here in America."

He was the most thoroughly natural, anti-snobbish, good little lion, and took his flattery with the most unspoiled simplicity. Common sense seemed to be his attribute, and he was a naturally truthful man. He did not tell unnecessary lies, as musical geniuses are apt to do. I once talked to him of Haweis's "Music and Morals." "Music has no morals," said he; "it is a sublime sensuality, and yet all music is sacred."

I thought of this afterward when once staying in Washington with a very religious Calvinistic lady, she objected to going to hear one of Gilbert and Sullivan's operas, because they were so light and so frivolous, and because an Admiral was made to dance in one of them, and yet I was amused in going to church with her to hear one of Arthur Sullivan's most captivating and funny melodies made into a voluntary for the organ. Indeed, his chapel training served him well even in comic opera, but he had no patience with a musical novel like "The First Violin," although he liked that better than he did "Charles Auchester," which was very much the vogue in England at one time.

I suppose that a man who is so steeped in music as he was has very little patience with the ignorance which creeps out in most musical criticism—he who hated to have a prentice hand at work at those musical terms, which had so much meaning for him and none for the neophyte. He thought very highly, however, of everything that Haweis wrote, although he did not like the man.

I saw him in London, at the house of Mrs. Ronalds, at those musical Sunday afternoons when she assembled the best company to hear the best music, herself often singing to Sir Arthur's accompaniment. I remember one afternoon when she asked him to give a theme to a young boy, a youthful prodigy, and he put his learned little brown hand on the piano, striking a few chords of a theme as simple perhaps as that of "Auld Robin Gray." He bent over and whispered in the boy's ears a few words. Then Sir Arthur sat down with some ladies and became an attentive listener. The bright little gifted pianist began with a roulade, shaking off the notes until he became familiar with the theme, then made it into a march; then into a national anthem, then into a love song, and then into a Spanish dance. At this, Sir Arthur laughed heartily. "A Spanish dance," said he, "listen to the castanets."

We learned afterward from the honest boy that the great musician in a few hurried words whispered in the boy's ear, had suggested this varied programme, and then had kindly affected to be surprised at the boy's opulent imagination.

He was full of the milk of human kindness, he was never the enraged musician. He had a very high sense of family duty, and before the first flush of his days of great prosperity had adopted the whole family of a deceased brother, whom he brought up as his own. His tireless industry, his sobriety, and temperance never deserted him. He seemed to have all of the musician's temperament except the failings.

It was a favorite theme with Arthur Sullivan, the debt which all music owed, especially in England, to Prince Albert, that artistic man, coming into English Philistinism as he did, and making music the fashion.

Although the superior culture of Prince Albert caused him to have his second son learn the violin, so that he played for several seasons in Arthur Sullivan's orchestra, the Duke of Edinburgh had no particular genius for music. I have heard him play at Mrs. Ronalds's, sitting humbly on a low bench. Had he not been a Prince, perhaps no one would have been so very furious to listen; but he had the true German perseverance, and, as Arthur Sullivan used to say, "He played well enough to be premier violin in my orchestra; so he must have played well." The Princess Christian sang very well, and the royal family can all paint, sculp, and do something artistic. The Queen, Mendelssohn thought, had a very great talent for music; she sang his airs with him to his accompaniment.

I met Arthur Sullivan twice at Monte Carlo, and once had the pleasure of a drive with him up to Turbia, whence one sees the finest views on the Corniche road. He was a charming talker, full of love of the historical, the picturesque, replete with anecdote, and full of fun. He always had some most apposite anecdote, never scandalous, but quite outspoken as to what he considered vulgar or pretentious.

He was on that day very full of the results of gambling on all the best traits of our common nature, particularly of the conduct of young mothers who took their little children to the rooms and allowed the poor little creatures to tumble over into sleep on the sofas while they devoted the early and late hours to the "trente et quarante."

"I met a woman I knew there last evening," said he, pointing down to the beautiful town of Monte Carlo, which lay at our feet, "and she asked me to get her husband away, for 'he always disturbs my luck,' she said. I answered her:

"'I have just straightened out your pretty girl and boy on the sofa and put my coat over the girl, as she shivered. Do you not think you had better go home and put them to bed, and then come back and finish your game?'"

"Will she ever speak to you again?" I asked. "Oh, yes, for at that moment she had nineteen on the red and made 500f.," answered Sir Arthur. "I declare," said she, "you have brought me luck."

He told me that he had loaned a certain London friend of his enough money to get her diamond "sunburst" out of pawn, on condition, that she would stop gambling, but, said he, "she will play until next July."

I met this versatile and agreeable man out at Sandhurst, the military college, one fine day in June, as we were both looking at the games. "These are the young gladiators of England," he said, looking at the military cadets as they scrambled through thorny bushes and over and under spiked gateways, and other necessary hardships conquered to prepare them for future struggles in India and Africa. Just then we were all waiting for the House of Commons to reinforce Gordon. It was perhaps in 1884, and I have never heard any man talk more like a statesman than Arthur Sullivan did on that subject. It was a peculiarity of his that on whatever subject he did talk, (and he talked very little perhaps,) he talked well. He was very intimate with many of the officers who were about our carriage on that gala day, and all called him "Arthur."

I never saw any man who was such a favorite in society. He was at this moment staying up at some famous country place near Sandhurst, where the hounds "threw off," and he described to me the old pictures, the treasures of this famous house, and the picturesque effect of the scene on a "hunting morning" at the place. I remember that he quoted most aptly the beautiful musical lines about the baying of the hounds from the "Midsummer Night's Dream," the words of the Huntress Queen,

I was with Hercules and Cadmus, once,
When in the woods of Crete they bayed the bear."

I asked him if he had read a little book just out on "Shakespeare as a Musician." He said he had, and had himself thought of writing an addition to it, as the knowledge which Shakespeare betrayed of musical instruments was exhaustive. He thought men of that day knew a great deal of "the soft recorder," and the harp, the "ear-piercing fife, and spirit-stirring drum," and not much of the piano, as it had not been thought out. "But," said he, "when we reflect on what a limited instrument Mozart composed all his exquisite melodies, it shows that the only thing necessary is genius and a piece of cat-gut."

In Paris in 1886 I had the pleasure of some Wagner talks with this gifted artist, who if he did not worship at the same shrine was always a generous critic. I could not understand Wagner then, and I strove to make Mr. Sullivan tell me what he was driving at.

No two men could be further apart in music that Wagner and Arthur Sullivan. As he said himself it was "mixing up a modern jester with Moses and the prophets." There is one enviable feature in that all-comprehensive Paris, that whatever you wish to know, or hear discussed, there is always a salon devoted to that particular thing. Every sort of belief is aired there. If one is in an uncongenial atmosphere one has but to move on to another to find himself in the best place to learn whatever he wishes to know. So, avoiding the accumulating amusements and distractions of a new life in Paris during a Winter there I fell in with a young singer, whom Marchesi called her "Wagner pupil," or "her madwoman," for Marchesi did not believe in the "music of the future." This young woman, who has since become famous, declared that Wagner's motif spoke the language of nature; that he had a naturalness of expression; that his music was sensuous and passionate and rapt with feeling. To which Madame Marchesi said, "Pooh!"

And Arthur Sullivan was asked to come between and explain. It was as if some clear-minded interpreter had appeared on the Tower of Babel. He made the dark places to beam with light. He made us all conscious of the lofty, incomparably divine import of Wagner's conceptions. Without agreeing with him, (or, I think, enjoying him,) he realized the man's greatness, and I remember his saying: "I can imagine the Wagner cult being not an irksome task, not even a task, but the beauty of Life." What breadth there was in this view! He was as free from the trammels of jealousy as he was free from evil speaking or any other meanness.

Arthur Sullivan began to be recognized in 1870, and from that time was a power in the musical world. It was curiously funny to hear him talk in defense of his operas in the high Wagnerian style. "The art of dance being," he would say, "the mimetic art, was therefore the most realistic of all the arts; that dance, tone, and poetry were each complimentary to each other, and their union the perfect lyric art work."

But not on ordinary occasions would Sir Arthur talk music. I have heard him even turn away Mrs. Ronalds with a joke when she asked him some musical question with "Oh, you know I am not fond of music." The most curious effect of all his varied and bizarre mind was the episode of "Patience" and the cult of the aesthetes. To look back now and through the Punch of that period is to sail into different seas. We can scarcely believe that Bunthorne, Angela, Sopha, and the sunflower ever did exist, and yet have we not seen the "Twenty Love-sick Maidens" and the "Greenery Yallowy, Grosveeor Gallery," come over here? I arrived in London in time, I remember, one season to see the Tripods and the Teapots, and the long-faced, dreadfully dressed woman—and did not D'Oyly Carte bring over Oscar Wilde in the flesh as he

Walked down Piccadilly
With a poppy or a lily?

Before his doom came, alas! Oscar Wilde married one of the aesthetes—a very good young woman she was, poor thing!

Arthur Sullivan became the darling of the English people. He made comic opera decent, and pretty, and funny, and innocent, because he had a noble culture behind it. He went on composing; also, anthems and cantatas and songs, but "they liked" "Pinafore" better than all. He was so genuine, so English, so brave, so good, so original. No man ever bore popularity so well or was so unspoilable.

He was very intimate with and very fond of Americans. His most intimate lady friends in London were Americans. He could turn from a noble tribute to Wagner and quote the line, "Der glaube leff," (faith lives,) and turn at once to a lively and most amusing description of the "American woman in Europe" as good natured, witty, and as fresh as anything could be. He knew everybody well from the Prince of Wales set through the ranks of Princess, Duchess, Countess, to the prima donna or chorus woman, this universal genius knew them all.

From the sublime majesty of "The Lost Chord" his melodies sail along until they seem to descend to a dance jingle, or to perpetually rise to some sumptuosity of outrageous fun, as in "Iolanthe," and again the memories would sweep back to Sophor, and Bach, and Beethoven, and all that grand company, and again would come in the Handel and Haydn of the little choir boy, he, the unspoiled favorite of royalty, who by the command of his royal mistress was nobly borne to his grave from the Chapel Royal in St. James's to St. Paul's Cathedral, where so often his own great numbers have swelled the pomp of a royal wedding, or the pathos of a kingly funeral, or stimulated the heart throb of private devotion with that most unbounded power of the "Messe Solonelle," or the fine old hymn of Martin Luther, which it was a great privilege to hear him play. The choir and the church never left him.

From its close relationship to the life and destiny of the people of every-day affairs, "The Darlingtons" has a certain kind of interest that is lacking in other fiction. It is typically American—only American conditions could have produced it—representing as it does the life of American industry and American enterprise. There is in it, too, the lightening touch of a well-defined love element.

By ISAAC MYER, LL.B.

Author of, The Qabbalah; The Philosophical Writings of Solomon ben Yehudah Ibn. Gebirol, or Avicebron; Scarabs; The Waterloo Medal, &c.

In his remarkable account of ancient Egyptian papyri entitled "The Oldest Books in the World" Mr. Isaac Myer makes marked statements respecting the character and significance of those documents, which will necessarily challenge the attention of intelligent readers and especially of students and careful thinkers. * * * It is a most valuable contribution to the study of Egyptology. * * * certainly interesting enough to command the attention, not only of scholars, but of the general public.—THE EVENING TELEGRAPH, PHILADELPHIA.

A great work by an eminent scholar, whose careful attention to the early history of Egypt has occupied his whole life. * * * He brought to his task the most earnest purpose, a complete equipment of basal education, the most untiring industry, the finest qualities of patience and persistence, and now that he has published the fruit of his lifetime of effort the world of high letters has added to its store a book of the first value. —THE TIMES, PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. Myer's book is of great importance as showing early standards of religious and philosophic thought, as well as standards of ethics and manners, showing very advanced ideas as to refinement of living and the treatment of women. * * * He argues that many of the statements in the few writings of ancient Egypt that have come down to us are fully in accord with the early teachings of Christianity.—THE NEW YORK TIMES.

In a large and handsome volume Mr. Myer has published the best and most recent translations of the Egyptian texts, with elaborate introductions and learned notes. Nor has he contented himself with publishing one translation only where different scholars have worked at the same text. The various translations have been compared together, and where they differ the several renderings have been set side by side. The reader may thus feel assured that he has before him all that the best Egyptian scholarship of the day can do toward throwing light on the meaning of the religious and ethical records of ancient Egypt.—SAT. REVIEW, LONDON.

Mr. Isaac Myer has brought together several remarkable and highly interesting documents. His work, indeed, might almost be called excerpts from the Egyptian Bible—such was practically the position held by "The Book of the Dead." It is older than any part of the Hebrew Scriptures. "Probably it existed in its present form two or three centuries before the Exodus, while it embodies documents of much higher antiquity and expresses—there is good reason to assert—what men thought and believed perhaps 6,000 years ago.—THE STANDARD, LONDON.

Mr. Myer has read carefully many books on the subjects discussed in his volume, and he has thought over what he has read and compared the subject-matter thereof with that found in the religious books of the Jews, Chinese, Greeks, Romans, and other highly civilized nations. As a result, he has come to the conclusion—and we think rightly—that the religious beliefs of the ancient Egyptians reveal a much higher conception of God than those of any ancient nation now known, and that they will bear comparison with some of the most sublime of the doctrines of the Christian religion. * * * The volume is printed on good paper and is furnished with a really excellent index, two advantages which are nothing like so common as they might be.—ATHENÆUM, LONDON.

A full translation of each document, with a dissertation thereon by Mr. Myer, fac-similes of some of the papyri and woodcuts of others, go to make up a handsome book. Anybody interested in the greater and lesser ethics of the ancient Egyptians and unacquainted with the documents themselves—perhaps a rare combination—will find here plenty of materials for a judgment upon them.—ACADEMY, LONDON.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Brentano's have arranged for the exclusive right to publish in the United States, in French, Edmond Rostand's play "L'Aiglon." The work is now in preparation, and it is expected to be ready about Dec. 17.

Among the juveniles being published by D. Appleton & Co. are William O. Stoddard's "Crowded Out o' Crofield, and Others," Molly Elliot Seawell's "Little Jarvis," James Barnes's "Midshipman Farragut," and David Starr Jordan's "The Book of Knight and Barbara."

Frederic Emory has written a novel of the South, which is promised for early publication by Frederick A. Stokes Company. It is entitled "A Maryland Manor."

An English translation of the Baron de Basancourt's "Secrets of the Sword," with illustrations by F. H. Townsend, is being published by The Macmillan Company. C. F. Clay is the translator.

Some of the masterpieces in the Meyer Brothers & Co.'s exhibition of bindings are: Marcel Schwob's "La Porte des Rêves," one of the 200 copies issued, to which an original water color by de Feure has been added, and the binding by Meunier is of an exquisite shade of brown with inlaid mosaic; Willette's "Paris Dansant," bound by David in red crush levant, on the front of which is the figure of a beautiful woman dancing; this is inlaid, as is also the coat of arms of the city. Ruban, Kauffman, Kastor, Chambolle, Gruel, &c., are also represented.

Coincident with the production of the dramatization of "Janice Meredith" comes the announcement of the publication of a Mary Mannering edition of the novel. The volume will be very fully illustrated with illustrations in colors and with half-tone reproductions of scenes from the play as produced by Miss Mannering.

Already the first edition of Lord Rosebery's "Napoleon; the Last Phase," consisting of 10,000 copies, has been exhausted in England. To a peculiarly large extent English criticism is inspired by the political position of the author. The Athenæum utters many disparaging wails over the book, and says that it is written in a style not historical, but rather adapted to that of after-dinner speaking.

As most everybody who reads books has perused "David Harum," the separate publication of the "Christmas Story," as the Widow Cullom episode in the novel has been aptly called, may be regarded as something in the light of a souvenir; it is illustrated with striking pictures of William H. Crane in the character of David Harum and with stage photographs. There are many persons who would like to see the horse trade episode and the Newport sketch presented in a similar way.

"Geber," the Tale of Haroum Al Raschid," by the late Kate A. Benton, has gone into its third edition at Frederick A. Stokes Company. This historical novel has been called by some critics a worthy companion to the Arabian Nights.

Ford's "The Honorable Peter Stirling" and Hope's "Rupert of Hentzau," both published by Henry Holt & Co., would seem to be exceptions to the rule that the life of current popular novels is generally brief. The former is just going to press for its forty-first time, (its fifth impression this year,) and the latter for its twelfth time, (making its third impression in 1900.) Mr. Gibson, the popular artist, should receive some credit for the success of "Rupert of Hentzau," which he illustrated.

Mr. John Lane is about to publish a novel on which he builds great hopes, entitled "The Column." It is by an English north-country man, Mr. Charles Marriott, who has not written before. The manuscript was sent to the Bodley Head, London, in the usual way, and two readers in succession said it was a remarkable effort. Then Mr. Lane showed it to Mr. Sidney Colvin, who also took an enthusiastic view of its merits. The story may be said to entwine itself around an old Grecian column, which exercises a strange effect over the owner's daughter. Hence the title.

A book which some persons who have been privileged to see in manuscript say is suggestive of the work of the Countess von Arnim, is being published by Longmans, Green & Co. It is entitled "How the Garden Grew," by Maude Maryon, with illustrations by Gordon Browne. It tells how the wife of an English curate made the exterior of her home beautiful, and there is much wholesome, old-fashioned sentiment in the telling.

"Tongues of Conscience," Robert H. Hichens's latest work, has gone into its second edition at Frederick A. Stokes Company, while Egerton Castle's "Consequences," published by the same house, has just entered its third.

Elizabeth Knight Tompkins has just finished a story which G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish early in the coming year under the title of "His Kind."

Dodd, Mead & Co., the publishers of "Dr. Dale," the new novel by Marion Harland and Albert Payson Terhune, announce the issue of a third edition within a month of the date of publication. The story is one of the few instances of a book having been written by a mother and her son.

Countess Loveau de Chavanne, who has returned from her recent visit to the West, is completing another novel, has written two plays, and is dramatizing her novel, "Ouirda," for a well-known New York manager. The sales of "Ouirda," by Countess de Chavanne, have led the publisher, Drexel Biddle, to bring out a new edition of the book.

Edward A. Denham, who is the agent for Alexander Denham & Co., of London, has returned to this country and has reopened his offices at 20 West Thirty-third Street, opposite the Waldorf. While in England he secured a large number of rare and interesting books, which are now on exhibition. In a neat and comprehensive catalogue of thirty-six pages he explains some of his more important items, in which there is a goodly array of Kiplingiana.

John Lane has just issued "The Art Portfolio," being 100 plates from The International Studio. The volume will be the same size as The Studio, and will contain many illustrations in color, in half tone, in line, in lithography. Among the artists represented are John S. Sargent, F. Vallotton, Fritz Thaulow, Aubrey Beardsley, Kiosai, Charles Robinson, Mortimer Menpes, Forain, G. Frampton, and Nico Jungmann.

A supplement to the Encyclopaedia Britannica is being prepared in London under the editorship of Mr. Hugh Chisholm, who has succeeded Sir Donald MacKenzie Wallace. Mr. Chisholm is assisted by a supposedly able corps of assistants, one member of which is Mr. John Corbin, who, until within a few months, helped Mr. Alden to edit Harper's Monthly. The supplement to the Encyclopaedia in question will, it is reported, extend to six or seven, or possibly more volumes.

Dr. William Elliot Griffis's "Story of the Verbeck of Japan," which has just come from the Fleming H. Revell Company's press, tells about the career of a man who, more than any one else, probably, spread civilization in that Far Eastern progressive little empire. The book is illustrated handsomely and suggestively.

The Ess Ess Publishing Company is issuing a new book by a new author, entitled "Nigger Baby and Nine Beasts." It is a collection of stories containing touching portrayals of animal love and hate, wisdom and folly, fun and mischief. The illustrations are by Gustave Verbeck.

The first 250 copies of "The Book of Omar and Rubaiyat," presented by M. F. Mansfield, were sold before publication, and the remainder of the 1,000 copies is now on the market. The book will not be reprinted. It is a volume of miscellany, literary and pictorial.

That weekly periodical called Science has become the organ of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Although established in 1883, the magazine was reorganized six years ago, and has since been under the charge of an editorial committee, with Prof. J. McKeen Cattell, head of the department of psychology and anthropology of Columbia University, as its responsible head.

The publisher of the Cornhill Booklet will issue during the coming year an American edition of The Page, an illustrated quarterly published in London under the editorship of Edward Gordon Craig. This edition will consist of 300 numbered copies, of which 288 will be for sale.

A striking departure from the line engraving of pretty girls, is a book just published by the New Amsterdam Book Company, entitled "Yankee Girls Abroad." The book is illustrated with a number of beautifully colored plates by J. M. Flagg. The name of the book indicates its character.

The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, is issuing through The Macmillan Company a volume entitled "The Influence of the Church in Modern Life." It is a study of the new problems that confront the Church with every step in the progress of society, and deals with such topics as new problems of the pulpit, old and new conceptions of God, evolution, and a new view of the Bible; fear, law, and love as motives in life, and the Church, its problems and claims upon American society.

The Scribners have just issued Worthington C. Ford's elaborately illustrated production entitled "George Washington" in two volumes. Besides the text it includes, as illustrated matter, probably the finest collection in reproduction of Washingtoniana that has ever been made. Mr. Ford's literary work appears to be most careful and cultured. His tone throughout is personal, and he attempts to show what sort of a man Washington was in the eyes of his contemporaries.

Arthur Morrison's novel, "The Dorrington Deed Box," will be published immediately by the New Amsterdam Book Company. Our readers will remember Mr. Morrison as the author of "Tales of Mean Streets."

Mr. Howells, in a forthcoming number of The Youth's Companion, will describe his experiences as a young contributor with various editors. Among other writers whose stories will appear in succeeding numbers of the periodical are G. W. Cable, F. R. Stockton, Sara Orne Jewett, Mary E. Wilkins, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Margaret E. Sangster, Harriet Prescott Spofford, F. T. Bullen, Gilbert Parker, Jesse Lynch Williams, C. A. Stephens, Flora Annie Steel, and J. L. Harbour.

The New Amsterdam Book Company announces the immediate publication of the fourth edition of "Linnet," a romance of the Tyrol, by the late Grant Allen.

A new edition, with forty new songs, of "Cabin and Plantation Songs," as sung by the Hampton students, is being issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Miss Marietta Holley has a little play arranged from her books, in which the different characters of the books appear, Samantha Allen, of course, taking a prominent part. It is having a great success in young people's societies, Epworth Leagues, college entertainments, &c. It is called "Betsy Bobbet," and, like all this author's writings, carries a good healthful influence, mingled with a good deal of fun. The books can only be obtained from the author.

DR. EGGLESTON'S NEW HISTORY.

The Transit of Civilization.

FROM ENGLAND TO AMERICA IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

By EDWARD EGGLESTON. A new volume in the author's History of Life in the United States. Uniform with the first volume, "The Beginners of a Nation." Small 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

In this unique volume the eminent historian pictures the literary, scientific, and other influences which were brought to this country from Europe in the early years of our history. He shows the religious ideas which the immigrants of the seventeenth century brought with them, and the modification of these ideas. Mother English folk-speech, folk-lore, and literature are presented with an unequalled richness of knowledge. The moral code and weights and measures of conduct are explained. The medical practice of that century in England and in its American developments has never been described as it is in this book. It is well within bounds to say that no such book on culture in the seventeenth century has ever appeared in England or America. While the book may be read independently, it follows "The Beginners of a Nation" as the second volume in Dr. Eggleston's series of "A History of Life in the United States."

The Beginners of a Nation.

A History of the Source and Rise of the Earliest English Settlements in America, with Special Reference to the Life and Character of the People. A volume in a History of Life in the United States. By EDWARD EGGLESTON. Small 8vo. Cloth, uncut, with Maps, $1.50.

Life and Letters of Thomas Henry Huxley.

By his son, LEONARD HUXLEY. In two volumes. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, $5.00 net.

THE CHICAGO DIAL: "It is quite impossible to summarize these letters to the brilliant galaxy of correspondents, men eminent in science, in philosophy, in education, and in literature. . . . The wealth in these two volumes may be inferred from the choice list, but it gives no hint of the inimitable style in which Huxley wrote what for us is a running comment on the topics of his times. . . . His services to education cover the whole field from the kindergarten to the most advanced university instruction. . . . The letters of Huxley are intensely human, revealing the passionate sincerity of the man and his interest not merely in the Book of Nature, in pure knowledge, and in the problems of existence, but also in the practical affairs of human life. . . . The editor's work has been done excellently, and Huxley's 'Life and Letters' is destined to take high rank among epistolary autobiography."

SUPPLEMENT TO

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

FIFTY-SIX PAGES.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1900.

AN UP-TOWN HOME FOR THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The Lenox Library Building for the New York Historical Society—that clearly is an inspiring thought. Housed in lower Second Avenue, this society has long been unable to exert upon the life of New York the influence of which, on other grounds, it has been amply capable. Within its walls lies stored a mass of material pertaining to the history of this city and State and of other States that is rich almost beyond the dreams of historical avarice. During the ninety-six years of its existence the society has brought together through intelligent industry and wise gifts a collection of books, pamphlets, manuscripts, portraits, and relics such as probably no other society in this country possesses save, perhaps, the one of Massachusetts.

And yet the people of New York know very little about it. Many of the society members are probably in ignorance of the historical opulence of which they are part possessors. Around the reading room of the library lie dark alcoves stored to the last inch of space, and often with double rows of books weighting down their shelves. In upper rooms other books lie stored away, and elsewhere out of daylight repose historical manuscripts. Even the benches of the lecture room have places constructed beneath the seats as receptacles for material impossible to put away elsewhere.

Lower Second Avenue is a remote and unfrequented place. Not only is it far down town, but far to the east, even of a down-town centre. Clearly there exists pressing need for two things—a building well to the northward, and a building spacious enough to house the society's collections on well-lighted shelves, affording elbow room for them as well as space for future growth.

No one will question that the Lenox Library Building meets these conditions. With such a home, the possibilities for usefulness that would lie within the grasp of the society seem to be the fullest that could be wished for. Its reading room would at once come into more general use; new and more active members would seek admission; courses of lectures on interesting topics could be given more frequently and would be certain of a larger attendance; gifts and bequests would be more often made, while throughout the city ought to be awakened new and potent interest in the stirring and important events associated with this town in past generations. Of all towns on this continent, Boston itself not excepted, New York is really the most striking, historically. Few people know this, but that scarcely alters the fact.

Let a sincere hope be added here that the proposed arrangement between the society and the New York Public Library may be brought about. The step initiated by Mr. John S. Kennedy, and which will have the co-operation of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, who in the recent death of Mr. John Alsop King now occupies the chair as Vice President, awakens the keenest interest. It should meet with the cordial support of every one really interested in the past life of this city and rightly proud of the memorable contributions it has made to the civilization of North America.

MORE ABOUT MISUSED WORDS.

Two correspondents, who cherish a respect for this noble tongue of ours, have written to us expressing a desire that we say something more about the misuse of common English words. One of them calls attention to the persistent use of "balance" for "remainder" and the other rightly objects to the employment of "lurid" to signify "brilliant" or "highly colored." These are fair specimens of the abuse of good words. The employment of "balance" for remainder is the outcome of the habit of business men in speaking of balancing their books. At the completion of the process they find either a profit or a loss and they call it a "balance," and that is precisely what it is not. If there were a balance there would be no profit, no loss, no remainder. It is an absolute impossibility for a balance and a remainder to be the same thing, and yet most persons speak of them as identical.

Now will some one please tell us what a "helpmeet" is? We frequently read of men whose wives are helpmeets, but no one explains what a helpmeet is. The Bible, which is written in pretty good English, quotes the Creator as saying: "I will make an help meet for him," which simply means that God decided to produce a help suitable for Adam. But who made one word out of that noun followed by the adjective? And why? What is the matter with "wife"?

Who authorized the use of the word "experience" as a verb, and why? "John is experiencing a great deal of trouble" is only an affected way of saying that he is having trouble. True, the trouble is part of his experience, but it is only mental laziness of the worst sort that leads persons to turn all nouns into verbs. And it narrows one's vocabulary.

Who set the pernicious habit of speaking of earth as "dirt"? Why, some good mother, of course. She saw that when her son made mud pies in the happy days of youth he came home with a dirty face. But Lord Palmerston cleverly said "Dirt is matter in the wrong place." The boy's face was dirty because earth was out of place on it. Good white paint would also have made his face dirty, yet the same thing would be used to make a door clean.

Who authorized the common use of "appreciate" for "enjoy"? A man may perfectly appreciate something that he does not enjoy at all. To appreciate a thing is to value it at its true worth. If it is not worth anything and a man recognizes that fact, he appreciates it just as much as the lady appreciates the novel which is "perfectly lovely."

And, worst of all, why use "get" for "have"? "My son has got long arms." Nonsense! He did not get them; he has them, but there is no arm shop where he could go and get them.

These are but a few of scores of misused words. Some of these examples were taken from the Standard Dictionary, but more from Richard Grant White's "Words and Their Uses," a book which all lovers of unadulterated English should read. There are other books and other misused words of which more may be said in the future.

MATERIAL INGREDIENTS IN BOOKS AND THE PRICE.

Some weeks since we were considering the apparent injustice of making the price of a book depend upon the material ingredients of its manufacture—on the paper, covers, &c.—instead of on the volume's usefulness and helpfulness, on the intellect or inspiration that is in it, or the thought and research that have gone to its creation. Let us admit that it is no light matter to write a popular novel. The deed depends as much on gift and labor of a kind as does the preparation of a more learned and ambitious work; but at last its author has a reward. In immense sales of books that cost the buyer no less than does the deeper work, he reaps a profit. He leaves behind him the plodding student, still in a shabby coat, and still with depleted purse, whose volume, of a like price and manufacture, sells very little, though each buyer is better for it.

There is a fair chance, indeed, that if the student's volume appeals to a limited class no publisher will assume the risk of its production. The publisher is not in business for philanthropy. He anticipates no sale sufficient to yield a profit on the "deep" book, and will turn in preference to the author of a novel of equal cost of manufacture, but possessing magnificent possibilities of sale. The best he can do is to praise the former work cordially and earnestly and to urge the author to bring it out on his own account, suggesting that he may gain in fame what, it is only fair to assure him, must be lost in money. But the author, already lavish of time and labor, may not be able to afford so dear a further investment, and so the world may not have the book. Is that right and is it wise? There is needed a philanthropist.

We should fear to try the alternative of grading prices for the benefit of deserving authors, since that would make good books dear and poor books cheap. To be sure, this is the rule in art, that is always and in drama, and the world will manage to scratch along. But there is a strong feeling that in literature the best should be as cheap as is the poorest.

The philanthropist in literature of pleasantest position is the personal patron of the long ago, the gilded Maecenas of a golden age, who shines by reflected glory, whose protégé drinks his wine and eats his dinners, and celebrates his name and kindness. But to-day we believe in associated charities, in philanthropy on business principles, and have a notion that Maecenas may hamper our author's free expression of opinion. The philanthropic impulse, as an aid to deserving authors is not a new conception, but we have yet to apply the old idea in a truly modern way.

Let one of the many rich men who would help the world give to a publishing house a trust fund, to be used as an impersonal Maecenas. The annual interest should subsidise good books of limited sale, so that the house which brings them out would at least lose nothing, nor the volumes' authors be out of pocket as well as out of time. The fund should be held exempt from share in the fluctuations of the firm's prosperity and depression. If the house failed the money might revert to the donor or his heirs or be transferable to another publisher.

It would not have to be a great sum. A capitalist who wanted to do something for the cause of popular enlightenment could hardly gain larger results than by this sort of endowment. Five thousand dollars a year in interest would mean the difference between coming out even and losing in a twelvemonth on possibly a dozen books for whose production the world would be richer and better. We could expect the fund to be managed with honesty by any reliable publishing house. But the donor, if he chose, might appoint Trustees whose approval of the manuscript would be necessary before an appropriation could be made. Good houses would be proud to have the conduct of such a fund, and glad to have it, for the good material to which it would be invitation and for the prestige it would bestow. As matters are, few publishers with capital hesitate to bring out really valuable works, if only to secure their imprint in them, although they foresee no direct financial profit. Thus the annual fund, available only to make up the deficits of approved books, would be not for the profit of the publisher, but for that of all readers, and for the saving from pecuniary loss of poor and conscientious authors. In an age of endowments a great work surely awaits the impersonal Maecenas.

WHY MEN OF TALENT FAIL.

The scattering in many directions of the natural forces that are in every one accounts largely for the mediocre achievements of most people in what they undertake. "The one prudence in life is concentration." There are few that can say of what they are engaged in, "This one thing I do."

The wide range of work that opens up in the wake of science and in the multifarious paths of civilization gives almost endless diversity to employment and opportunity to human gifts and accomplishments. And this range and diversity are apt to attract the individual mind in various directions, unless one is governed by a clear and overpowering conception of a specific object. The one result is seen in men generally, the other in the lives of those who have moved the world, whether of the silent and obscure investigator, or of him who said—working in the light of day—"How am I straitened ere it be accomplished."

The variety in modern life, and which imparts to it some of its charm, tends, nevertheless, to distract and disintegrate, instead of unifying and directing our powers toward the point of certain achievement in our work. The educational vogue is, in many instances, answerable for this dispersion of the mental energies over a wide and superficial area, and prevents that concentration by which a thorough acquaintance is gained with any one subject. The question of what this results from is beside our present purpose, but what it results in is plainly and easily to be seen. Boys follow quite naturally, when they become men, the methods in which they have been schooled, and they have been virtually taught that to have a skin-deep acquaintance with many subjects, and no thorough knowledge of any, is the whole duty of man. The consequence is that they find themselves without special aptitude for any one calling, but are apt to become "everything by turns and nothing long," and are, in their occupation, the sport of circumstances.

In order to the successful pursuit of any calling, there must be interest in it for its own sake. No one makes the most of his work in the best sense, or ever will, whose self is his sole aim and end. The wholesome enthusiasm essential to this success is consistent only with a modest opinion of ourselves. What has come to be called success, from the materialistic point of view, may be attained, but it is not worthy of the name that is not directly related to the welfare of men; for, of a truth, "none of us liveth to himself." The limits of human power are in contrast to the unlimited scope for human endeavor, but the aim of the egotist centres in himself, and his work ends there. The performances of Napoleon, acted in the eyes of the world, ended in St. Helena and a name. The work in its sublime solitude of David Livingstone alters not and ends not with the centuries,

"But bears it out even to the edge of doom."

It is another pregnant saying of Emerson's, in view of the relation of things: "In learning one thing well you learn all things." Hence the man who knows all about any one thing is a dangerous opponent. But the man who knows something of everything gives us no concern. We know that he is easily thrown, and in no one of his kaleidoscopic forms is he a real man. Knowledge is what a man is measured by, and if he knows nothing truly, where is the man?

A cult exists among us with whom the unpardonable sin is to say of anything, "I don't know"; whose principal rite is disguising the fact of their own ignorance, and whose skill consists in fooling others and themselves into believing that they do know. There is more hope of a confessed fool than of those men. It is only when one has really gained the knowledge of something that he enjoys the privilege of a free soul in saying frankly and openly of another thing, "I don't know." The man who has not learned to say that does not, and never does, know anything. He lacks the ear to hear, and cannot be where he must play the listener. To have to do so "wrings his withers," and he is fain to escape the ordeal. Not Orpheus with his lute could induce him to endure it. In time he reaches the point of complete self-deception and a distinct aversion to learning anything.

Turn where he may,
By night or day,
The things that he has seen he sees, and sees no more.

You get all he knows at the first sitting, and when you have it, it is not worth having. There is no variety in his life; it is one persistent and consuming "I." All the smatterings he gains of things are turned to egotistic purposes. He reads "to contradict and confute, to believe and take for granted, to find talk and discourse," not "to weigh and consider." Unless he finds scope for the assertion of his diminutive self, life, to him, is not worth living. That modern ancient, Seneca, says: "The more contemptible and ridiculous a man is, the more ready he is with his tongue." The less he knows, the less he thinks there is to know. Sit down with one of this cult and tell him of what never was, and he is quite familiar with it. Said a wag to a pretentious scientist, "Have you read Bunsen's book on 'The Malleability of Light'?" "Well, no, I have not: Bunsen sent me a copy of it, but the fact is, I have not had the time." There is hardly a book he has not read; he will not give a negative to the "Faerie Queene." Discuss one he has never by any possibility seen, and he will follow you with such art as to be almost abreast of you, and will all but take the words out of your mouth. He would deceive, "if it were possible, even the elect." But could he but get a glimpse of himself as he appears in this rôle to common sense, could see the insignificant dimensions to which he shrinks in the process to the eye of common honesty, he would be "dumb with silence," instead of making another dumb with shame. There is no helpfulness in such a one; hardly any help for him, and his name is "legion, for they are many." Alas, that he should be the abstract and reflection of the time!

For, if the degree of civilization in any nation depends on the quality of the knowledge possessed by the people, the present civilization may not be that ideal thing we are accustomed to hear about. If we could get away from ourselves and borrow the eyes of posterity, we might see that, after all, the higher life of man has in this age had only a very partial development, that he has not as yet generally found out what is good fortune, perhaps lost some of the knowledge of that which in other times he has had in surer possession. We are addicted to giving ourselves airs—an infallible sign of immaturity—about the wonderful century which we have had a hand in rounding out and making supereminent. The fact of the "airs" is in itself evidence of the absence of the very thing we plume ourselves upon. The eye of posterity may see us in the light in which we see the chief of darkest Africa who thought himself in full dress when he had simply a hat on. That a man should know what his work is, and mind it, bringing himself to bear upon it from every position in which he may be, applies in all the relations of life, and is "the one prudence" in it.

DESERTING OLD BOOK FRIENDS.

Did the idea ever occur to you that there was something sad, even cruel, in deserting an old book that has served you faithfully, contributing, willy nilly, what little enjoyment it could; always faithful, never complaining or sulky? Some men will cut an acquaintance—aye, even a life-long friend—if his coat be shabby or his hat faded. But what do we think of such a man? Do we want him for a friend? Nay. Such a man has but little to recommend him.

So with books. The book that has been our fireside companion; that has cheered the lone watches of the night, or soothed the fever, that has lulled the mind into a blessed state of forgetfulness when the angel of death spread his wings round our home, or consoled the wretched heart in how many hours of anguish that come into even the happiest lives! Shall we throw it out on the ash heap because it is faded and soiled? By all that is gentle and good, I say no.

Do we ever sufficiently realize what a book really is? 'Just think of the work involved in even the simplest production of the workshop that makes tools for the mind. Yea, verily, for the heart and the soul, too. The writer with the ideas and the ability to express them; the wonderful machines that make the paper; the printers who set the type and work the presses; the binders who fold the sheets and bind them into neat, convenient form. Are all these things nothing to you? Of course, I know that you paid for your books, but money cannot buy many things that are as necessary to man as food or clothing. Money cannot repay a true interest in the work that so many have done in developing the printing and kindred arts for the benefit of all mankind, and frequently the hearts of the writers of our books are sad and weary with the toil and struggle for existence. Do they try to make us as miserable as they themselves are? Few of them do. No; they put forth their best efforts to help and cheer and encourage and uplift their fellows, and sadly small is the recompense therefor, as a rule.

Those who go down to the sea in ships know what it is to be lonely. With nothing but a wild waste of waters day and night to look upon, how dear to the sailor is a book, let it be ever so old. Seldom it is that Jack heaves a book overboard. Out in the dreary mining camps, where the men, far from any refining influence of home or friends, spend their days in danger and toil unknown elsewhere, how welcome at night is a book—any kind of a book. It matters not whether it be so old that it will hardly hold together, there is sure to be a warm reception in store for it.

One of the principal appeals from our soldiers in the Philippines has been for books and papers. Yes, the mind needs food as much as the body. So many, alas, make shipwreck of their lives because they fail to recognize this fact. The mind must work at something, and, as so many have pointed out, the garden of the mind must either produce beautiful flowers or noxious weeds.

How often have I grieved to see an old, battered veteran of a book thrown out as though it was of no further use on earth. And to give it to some one else is but little better. The book was yours, it had learned your ways, and, like a faithful old servant, it is too far down the hill of life to be comfortable with any one else. Could I part with you, my old, yellow, crumpled, faded, torn set of Dickens? Did we not laugh together over Sam Weller and Mr. Pickwick and the Fat Boy and Dick Swiveller and Mrs. Gamp? Didn't we fall in love, in turn, with Dora and Little Em'ly and Bella Wilfer and the student's bride-that-was-to-be? Didn't we weep over Paul Dombey and Ham Peggotty and Tiny Tim, Margaret Veck, and Little Nell? No, I never will desert you, Mr. Micawber.

We will all wear out and fade and lose our youthful lustre if we live long enough. I know there are some people who have no use for a person or thing that has lost the least bit of his or its former attractiveness, even if that person or thing has been worn out in their own service. Is this not selfish and cruel? "The old man cannot work any more. Send him to the poorhouse, he's in the way here. Out upon him; he's old and useless. We want the room he occupies. He's had his day. We want ours."

Ah, yes, to be sure you do, and take good heed that ye do not get it, pressed down and running over, for with such measure as ye mete to others, verily it shall be meted out to ye.

The old book is useless. Throw it out and get another. Never mind the work that was put into its production; never mind the old associations, the old ties, the old loves and sorrows and joys. Take no thought for the old books and the old friends and the old home. Stretch out your hands eagerly into the future to grasp the new things and the bright things. Behold! your hands and your heart shall be empty and you will live so long again for the things that are gone. To the lonely prisoner in his cell, pondering over an ill-spent life, the book that you throw away would be a boon—perhaps the means of bringing the lost sheep back to those pleasant pastures where the still waters of peace flow. But, better than giving away your old friends, buy new ones, if you must buy them, and give them away. Keep the old books for their associations and memories, for the good influences they shed around you, and the tender thoughts they bring back from the past to strengthen your hope in the future and enable you to live happily in the present. Is this sentiment? Be it so. Much that is good in life is linked to the finer sentiments that our books create and keep alive in us. Shall we neglect them in their old age? Nay, let us rather keep them by us, a part of our very lives. Let us choose them worthily, and, having chosen, love them to the end. We may live by their precepts and die, aided by the strength that philosophy and virtue impart to even the humblest mind.

CYRIL GOLDTHWAITE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A recent issue of your SATURDAY REVIEW contained a list of Ralph Waldo Emerson's contributions to the four volumes of The Dial, Boston, 1841-3. Permit me to add to that incomplete catalogue the following marked by Mr. Emerson with his initials as written by him, in my copy of The Dial, now in the Library of Congress:

To those who regard Emerson (as he unquestionably will be regarded in coming generations) as one of the greatest of American writers, it may prove interesting to note how many of these early poems and essays (all written before the age of forty) were rejected or modified by his maturer literary taste in after years. I have long been accustomed to recommend his essays to readers of discernment as among the finest intellectual tonics in all literature. Here is a passage from his review of Carlyle's "Past and Present," (1843:)

Here is Carlyle's new poem, his Iliad of English woes, to follow his poem on France, entitled "The History of the French Revolution." In its first aspect, it is a political tract, and since Burke, since Milton, we have had nothing to compare with it.

Here is a message which those to whom it was addressed cannot choose but hear. Though they die, they must listen. It is plain that whether by hope or by fear, or were it only by delight in this panorama of brilliant images; all the great classes of English society must read, even those whose existence it proscribes. Poor Queen Victoria—poor Sir Robert Peel—poor Primate and Bishops—poor Dukes and Lords! there is no help in place or pride or in looking another way; a grain of wit is more penetrating than the lightning of the night storm, which no curtains or shutters will keep out. Here is a book which will be read, no thanks to anybody but itself. What pains, what hopes, what vows, shall come of the reading! Here is a book as full of treason as an egg is full of meat, and every lordship and worship of high form and ceremony of English conservatism tossed like a football into the air, and kept in the air with merciless kicks and rebounds, and yet not a word is punishable by statute.

If the good heaven have any word to impart to this unworthy generation, here is one scribe qualified and clothed for its occasion. One excellence he has in an age of Mammon and of criticism, that he never suffers the eye of his wonder to close. Let who will be the dupe of trifles, he cannot keep his eye off from that gracious Infinite which embosoms us. As a literary artist, he has great merits, beginning with the main one that he never wrote one dull line. How like an air balloon or bird of Jove does he seem to float over the continent, and, stooping here and there, pounce on a fact as a symbol which was never a symbol before. This is the first experiment; and something of rudeness and haste must be pardoned to so great an achievement. This grandiose character pervades his wit and his imagination. We have never had anything in literature so like earthquakes as the laughter of Carlyle. He "shakes with his mountain mirth." It is like the laughter of the Genii in the horizon. These jokes shake down Parliament House and Windsor Castle, Temple and Tower, and the future shall echo the dangerous peals. He is full of rhythm, not only in the perpetual melody of his periods, but in the burdens, refrains, and grand returns of his sense and music.

Markham's Pessimism.

E. B. PATTERSON, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "Apropos of Howard Pyle's decoration of Edwin Markham's 'Man with the Hoe, and Other Poems,' some one writing in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Nov. 10 asa severe indictment of the poor for alleged pessimism. I know that this dismal charge has sometimes been laid at Mr. Markham's door, but I am one who cannot read despair in his message. Rather, as Prof. Dowden of Dublin puts it in his criticism of the spirit of Mr. Markham's work, do I see there 'hope veiled in indignation.' A pessimist, as I understand that creature, is a man who finds all things evil, and announces evil as the necessary, inevitable, inexorable, unmitigatable condition of the universe. Mr. Markham, it seems to me, does not come with any such gospel. Why not judge him by his utterance on Love in the sonnet 'Love's Vigil'?

Love will outwatch the stars.
* * * * * * *
Then all the worlds will know that Love is fate,
That in the Cosmic Council he is God.

"Is not this a cry of cheer? Love will at last be triumphant. Love's purpose moves through many obstacles, and chief among these the poet finds the ignorance and selfishness of man. Holding this view, it is plain that the poet feels it the duty of all to cry out against these hindrances, and so help make the world divine. But, although this feeling of love, thwarted in its effect 'to hush and heroize the world' is one of the moods of the Markham singing, there are other and gladder notes. Joy in nature sounds in 'An Old Road.'

I kiss my hand to the world with laughter,
* * * * * * *
Oh, the whole world is glad of the wind.

"Faith in human progress rings in 'Brotherhood' and 'The Joy of Nations.'

To this event the ages ran,
Make way for Brotherhood—make way for man.
* * * * * * *
Come let us live the poetry we sing.

"Faith in the protectingness of God is the message in 'Two Taverns'—the bee in the flower bell, the man in his bed:

Over us both the same dear care
As we slumbered unaware.

"The same trust is in 'The Butterfly,' He that framed the impenetrable plan
And keeps His world with thee will keep with man.

"There are many other citations that would go to support my interpretation, but I think these few will show that the poet has tenderness and hope for man and an abiding faith in the ultimate good awaiting him."

CYNIC NO. 2, Brooklyn, N. Y., expressing his views of Mr. Markham's poetry, says: "Markham's poems are certainly exaggerated, and intentionally so. When I read 'The Man with the Hoe,' I came to the conclusion that the aim was to portray the unintelligent laborer, whether on a farm, in a mine, or a ship's hold, or wherever he may be. While a state of society exists in which a man cannot find market for his labor, where children not yet grown are employed in factory and other labor, where women are forced into degradation, and where the individual does not receive the full equivalent of his work, it is not possible to avoid the development of men of the type depicted by Edwin Markham.

"Thanks to the Compulsory Education act, and in spite of numerous evasions, we shall not develop many whose light within the brain is entirely extinguished, but we shall, under existing conditions, develop in their place the much-talked-of 'man without the hoe.' Indeed, we have them now, both 'The Man With the Hoe' and 'The Man Without the Hoe.' It is entirely safe to say that such men do exist as Markham describes in the 'Man With the Hoe' and the 'Stone Breaker.'

"Probably Longfellow was criticised adversely when he wrote 'The Slave in the Dismal Swamp' and Hood for 'The Song of the Shirt.'

"Is it not true that all poetry is more or less exaggerated—that is, highly colored? Are the poets who can see nothing but beauty in this world doing a higher work than he who strives to make the whole world beautiful in reality by exposing and bringing to the light the wickedness and wrongs that have so long held it back?"

HENRY WILSON, New York, says: "Many people differ from your critic in his statement that Mr. Markham's verses do not, nor can they, tend toward the elevation of the downtrodden.

"That such pitiable creatures whom Mr. Markham has made his 'patrons' actually exist, there is not the slightest shadow of a doubt. Take, for instance, our coal miners; has there ever existed such an example of abject slavery, living as they do from hand to mouth, with scarcely enough food to insure their existence, and with no chance to improve their condition? Should they refuse to work in the mines and seek a less dangerous and more compensating employment, starvation would be almost inevitable; should they become sick and unable to perform their duties, they would be at the mercy of their employers. The negro slaves of the South in this respect were much better off. Their masters found it to their own interest to take the best care of them; but with the mine owners, a miner is easily replaced by another without the least expense. So you see it is not necessary to suppose such creatures of 'mental, moral, and spiritual night' to exist. The condition of the miner is bad enough, in fact too bad. Mr. Markham does not preach anarchy either unconsciously or not. He describes those false conditions in life which (if civilization includes the progress of humanity) should be improved. His theme is true and worthy of a poet. Given such degrading conditions it behooves man to change them. Is not this theme a true and just one?"

The Rev. ALEXANDER FITZGERALD IRVINE, New Haven, writing at length on this subject, says, in part: "Markham saw the collier of Pennsylvania, the human automata in their factories and sweatshops; he saw capital with its 80 per cent. of the world's wealth, the middlemen with 15, and the creator of all wealth—the toiler—with his 5 per cent. He saw the first two classes in the mansions and country villas, with their Summer yachts, and he saw the workers in the foul slums, deserted by the church and neglected and robbed by the politicians. 'Tis the voice of the critic that sounds like the hooting of an owl. This man holds the mirror up to nature, and nature doesn't like the picture, and breaks the glass. Markham sees a man sitting on the safety valve of the engine of life and warns him of the danger. Something is likely to go up, and it may be the man on the valve. His critic says, 'He looks down, not up, and does not lend a hand.' In what direction was Garrison looking while attacking the system of slavery? Down, according to his critics. Garrison was pleading for the social slave. Markham pleads for 'the slave at the wheel of labor.' Yes, he lends a hand, and an eye, too, which is more necessary perhaps than a hand, for not infrequently the oppressor of the poor is a man who is so much a part of the warp and woof of this mammonized age that he is actually blind to his own sin and injustice. Millet's picture was 'thrillingly lovely' as a work of art. The dilettanteism of Europe and America raved over it as a picture, but when the man with the hoe found speech it was discovered that he was vulgar and pessimistic, and the man who opened his mouth, an outside of Euclid sort of disturber, who 'looked down, not up, and did not lend a hand' to the man who owned 'the man with the hoe.'"

A Story of Agassiz.

W. D. Howells in Harper's Magazine.

I do not know whether Mrs. Agassiz has put into her interesting life of him a delightful story which she told me about him. He came to her beaming one day, and demanded:

"You know I have always held such and such an opinion about a certain group of fossil fishes?"

"Yes, yes!"

"Well, I have just been reading ——'s new book, and he has shown me that there isn't the least truth in it," and he burst into a laugh of pleasure, wholly unvexed by having found himself convicted of an error.

By HENRY ILLOWIZI, Author of "In the Pale," etc. Illustrated by a photogravure and half tones from drawings by W. Sherman Scott (Paris.) 12mo, cloth, gilt top. List price, $1.50.

RICHARD HENRY STODDARD says: "Readers are not likely to require any guarantee of their authenticity, which is unmistakable: they reveal such knowledge of early Jewish and Moslem traditions and superstitions."

"An almost untouched and virgin field is entered by the author of "The Weird Orient." Mr. Illowizi has performed a notable work . . . these weird tales make up a very fascinating book. Every one of the nine tales teems with a psychological interest, as well as affording entertainment as a story." — N. Y. Herald.

"An exceedingly brilliant book." —N. O. Picayune. "Interesting, poetical and fascinating." — Boston Globe.

IN THE PALE.

By HENRY ILIOWIZI, Author of "The Weird Orient." Illustrated, 12mo, cloth. List price, $1.25.

These are legends and stories current to what is officially known as "The Pale of Jewish Settlement in Russia," and as folk-lore is perhaps unique.

"There has been an exuberant literature of the modern Jewish people. In Europe it embraces a host of works of fiction, (Aguilar, D'Israeli, Heine, Kompert, Zangwill,) which have been reinforced by similar works of Eugene Sue, George Eliot, and other writers outside the Jewish pale. Henry Iliowizi is not the inferior of any who have entered this field, and is a master of both humor and pathos.—Sunday School Times, Philadelphia.

The New York Herald, in an advance review, says:

"An interesting and valuable work . . . Mr. Cook has an eye for the large things that are permanent, and the small things that are momentarily own more interesting. He tells a story well. He describes a scene vividly. He is an excellent observer."

"M. W. H." (Mayo W. Hazeltine, the eminent literary critic,) in the course of a four-column advance review of this work in The New York Sun of Oct. 7, says:

"The usefulness of such a book will be generally appreciated. It is impossible for an American citizen to know too much of his own country, and every work that helps to increase his knowledge thereof ought to be welcomed as a valuable addition to current literature."

LUCRETIUS.

About the middle of the present century, because of a strange correspondence with certain characteristic tendencies of modern thought, Lucretius, so long a scholar's poet, gained the interest of a wider public. To this time most men had thought him simply an unattractive philosophical poet, an unusually voluble inhabitant of the "epicurean city," an unfortunate person who, as tradition and St. Jerome related, was crazed by a love-philtre, toiled in his lucid intervals at a huge poem, and, finally, in a greater access of madness, died by his own hand. There were, of course, exceptions to these undiscerning opinions. Both Montaigne and Bacon recognized in him a not unfriendly spirit, and quote lines concerning the decay of the world, or the evil of superstition, with profound appreciation. In England in the seventeenth century Evelyn had translated him laboriously, and Dryden had Englished some of his rather indelicate advice with unctuous fullness. In France of the eighteenth century the encyclopedists much approved of his putative atheism. A little later, as we know from Mrs. Shelley's record, Shelley brought to the reading of the De Natura Rerum a passionate sympathy with its hatred of superstition. But it remained for Tennyson, by his famous poem, to bring Lucretius into permanent relation with English literature, and for historians, editors, and critics like Lewes, Mackail, Munro, and Mr. Mallock himself, to present him in his proper bulk as a poet and a personality.

All that is known of the life of Lucretius is contained in the lines from Jerome just cited; and even they are doubtful, for the essential point of his intermittent madness is incredible. We can conceive that a madman, in the lapses of his disease, might compose such brief pieces as those of Cowper or Smart, but not that he could produce such a massive and closely reasoned work as the De Natura Rerum. From his frequent mention of sleeplessness, dreams, and waking visions, it seems more likely that so intense and ceaseless was the activity of his thought that there was a cumulative tension until the final, sudden break. There is, indeed, in his fundamental conception of the tremendous rain of atoms through the void of space, and in all the fabric built upon it to prove the infinite nothingness of life, a kind of cosmic intoxication akin to that of Nietzsche. But in the case of Lucretius this is not so much the result of the blot on the brain as it is the delirium of the spiritual sickness of his age. The poem is the culmination of the science and philosophy of that hard, pagan world on which "disgust and secret loathing fell."

Lucretius's great triumph of mind was to conceive the entity of the universe, to get behind the infinitely various phenomena of nature and to find there, eternally toiling, a single force; to trace this, imaginatively, in its workings through all the business of the world and of human life. All this was, in his case, the work of a marvelous gift of scientific intuition, which, had he lived in our day, would indubitably have made him a leader of scientific thought. How great this was is best seen perhaps in his account of the origin of the race and of the arts of life. Here, forsaking the current dreams of a golden age, he anticipated, absolutely without data, the general trend of our anthropology.

But in the main Lucretius in expounding the atomic materialism of Epicurus, his master, did not so much change or add to it as ennoble it by the fiery ardor with which he applied it to life. It is this phase of his work which is of most moment to the student of literature. To him, as to Omar, Leopardi, Thomson, and many more, the greatest of all evils was that superstition which made life one long fear of death, and of the torment to come thereafter. In some sense we may estimate the depth and strength of Lucretius's own religious nature by the force with which he attacks this fear which he believes to be superstition. He brought his atomic materialism to prove that death ends all, not as did Omar to justify the cult of the Vine and of the Rose, but to effect a katharsis of selfpity and terror, so to exalt the steadfast mind, and the stoical delights of wisdom and temperance. He feels the pathos of the

Crowned with a flower or two and then an end,

but, unlike those other great pessimistic poets, Leopardi and James Thomson, he does not so much feel the mystery of it. He is even tolerably content because he knows, or thinks he knows, the causes of things, seeing them under his own particular aspect of eternity.

There is in the whole huge conception of the poem something impassioned and magnificent, which makes even the passages of close ratiocination seem part of a single, poetical plan; but it is in his musings upon the specific theme of life and death that the excellence of Lucretius's work is most obvious. Here the essential clear-headed, yet passionate, sincerity of his nature finds expression with the greatest magnificence of verse, and, so the philologers tell us, with the greatest purity of Latin style. Writing in a somewhat affected and Alexandrine age, he, as remote as Milton from the literary fashions of his day, turned to Homer, Empedocles, and Ennius, more ancient and rugged models. In passages like that famous one beginning,

Jam, jam non domus accipiet te laeta, neque uxor
Optima, nec dulces occurrent oscula nati
Praeripere et tacita pectus dulcedine tangent,

he rises to a pitch of poetry which one cannot contemplate soberly or without falling into superlatives. In these passages of solemn brooding over the ends of life the long-rolling hexameter takes on a kind of brazen harmony which may, not too fancifully, be likened to the crash and swell of the orchestra, wearing the dusk of the gods.

It is these passages of sombre meditation which have formed the ground of Mr. Mallock's work. He has not aimed to give, as Tennyson did, an idea of the scope of the whole poem, or to translate closely any part of it, but simply to summarize in as beautiful a form as might be the wisdom of Lucretius most congruous to our own thinking. In this he has succeeded admirably. In abandoning the octave stanza, formerly used by him in translating from Lucretius, for the meter of FitzGerald's Rubaiyat, Mr. Mallock has shown excellent judgment. Not only does the latter afford better opportunity for a more fruitful comparison of the two great materialist poets, but, with the possible exception of our own elegiac quatrain, he could hardly have found a form better suited to his theme. Comparisons with FitzGerald's verse are, of course, inevitable. Mr. Mallock fails to attain quite the varied, expressive movement, the subtle vowel assonances, and the impeccable phrasing of old Fitz; but he does have a good gift of vigorous, dignified verse, which, by virtue of a knack of crisp alliteration, rolls pleasantly from the tongue. The qualities of his work together with the course of his cycle may be shown in a few of the best quatrains.

Beginning with the comfortable praises of wisdom, he proceeds to relegate the gods, uncareful of mankind, to "the lucid interspace of world and world," where they rest with dignity. Then, approaching the heart of his theme, he sings the passing of the glory of the world:

Globed from the atoms falling slow or swift,
I see the suns, I see the systems lift
Their forms, and even the systems and the suns
Shall go back slowly to the eternal drift.

Nothing abides. Thy seas in delicate haze
Go off; those moored sands forsake their place,
And where they are, shall other seas in turn
Mow with their scythe of whiteness other bays.

Lo, how the terraced towers and monstrous round
Of league-long ramparts rise from ont the ground,
With gardens in the clouds. Then all is gone,
And Babylon is a memory and a mound.

Then he comes to speak of the sadness of death, and of the consolation for it; it takes away all happiness, but it likewise drowns all desire of happiness in its dreamless sleep:

Never shalt thou behold thy dear home more,
Never thy wife await thee at the door,
Never again thy little climbing boy
A father's kindness in thine eyes explore.

"All you have toiled for, all you have loved," they say,
"Is gone, is taken in a single day";
But never add, "All memory, all desire,
All love—these likewise shall have passed away."

Thither the singers and the sages fare.
Thither the great Queens with their golden hair.
Homer himself is there with all his songs,
And even my mighty Master's self is there.

We may feel that in both science and religion we have gone infinitely beyond Lucretius, but the warfare between them is still waging, hence we must still feel some response to lines like these. It is this expression of the instinctive human attitude toward death, much the same in Ecclesiastes, in Villon, or in Hamlet, which gives the work of Lucretius its ultimate value and which constitutes the chief interest of Mr. Mallock's book. Whatever the complexion of one's own belief, he cannot but be moved in the fashion which is the mark of true poetry, by the final original quatrain in which the interpretation of Lucretius is completed:

Flakes of the water, on the waters cease!
Soul of the body, melt and sleep like these.
Atoms to atoms—weariness to rest.
Ashes to ashes—hopes and fears to peace.

Women Slaves to Bric-a-Brac.

From The Ladies' Home Journal.

There are no people on the face of the earth who litter up the rooms of their homes with so much useless and consequently bad furnishing as do the Americans. The curse of the American home today is useless bric-a-brac. A room in which we feel that we can freely breathe is so rare that we are instinctively surprised when we see one. It is the exception rather than the rule that we find a restful room. As a matter of fact, to this common error of overfurnishing so many of our homes are directly due many of the nervous breakdowns of our women. The average American woman is a perfect slave to the useless rubbish which she has in her rooms. This rubbish, of a costly nature where plenty exists, and of a cheap and tawdry character in homes of moderate incomes, is making housekeeping a nerve-racking burden. A serious phase of this furnishing is that hundreds of women believe these jimcracks ornament their rooms. They refuse to believe that useless ornamentation always disfigures and never ornaments. Simplicity is the only thing that ornaments. It does more; it dignifies. The most artistic rooms are made not by what is in them, but by what has been left out of them. One can never quarrel with simplicity, and nothing goes to make for perfect good taste so surely as a simple effect. A tasteful effect is generally reached by what has been left undone. And that is the lesson most needed in America to-day; not what we can put into a room, but what we can leave out of it.

NOW IN ITS TWENTY-FIFTH THOUSAND.

Dr. W. L. Courtney, editor of "The Fortnightly Review": "Mrs. Atherton describes with passionate power the closing scenes of the huge Republic, the short, sharp debates, the silent, excited crowds, the incalculable significance and solemnity of the crisis, and the attitude of such splendid specimens of American manhood. . . . The book is delightfully written, the love scenes in particular. . . . In her new novel she writes of humanity, but it is humanity at its best, and she has achieved a very great and noticeable success."

Mr. Ambrose Bierce: "In one way, 'Senator North' is unique; it presents a vivid picture of the social and political life of the national capital which has never been equaled in essential veracity . . . it constitutes, in the form of a fascinating tale, a splendid and adequate defense of Congress and our higher officials against the cheap and easy contumely of foreign observers."

Mr. Richard Le Gallienne: "But, hold what opinions we may as to Mrs. Atherton's formulæ of romance, it is undeniable that she is a notable romancer. Indeed, in my humble opinion, we have had no English woman novelist so impartial since George Eliot."

LONDON LITERARY LETTER

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW by William L. Alden.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The success of Miss Cholmondeley's clever story, "Jesebel," has been very marked. The heroine was named Jezebel by her father in order to revenge himself on her mother. Precisely how this vengeance was to be accomplished is not very clear, unless the vengeful father imagined that the child would necessarily live up to her name. If so, he was disappointed, for Jesebel turned out to be a most admirable girl.

The mistake the man made was in assuming that Jezebel is a name that must necessarily condemn its wearer to an imitation of the Scriptural Jezebel, who, we all know, was addicted to painting her face, and hence must have been a very wicked woman, who was thrown out of a fourth-story window and richly deserved her end. Women nowadays never paint their faces, and if nets were to be spread under all windows of houses in which women said to be addicted to the use of rouge reside, the precaution would be a vain one, because, of course, no such houses exist. But in point of fact a girl named Jezebel ought to be a gentle, virtuous, and lovable girl, for Jezebel is only a form of Isabella, and it is notorious that Isabellas, Isabels, and Bellas generally, are among the most desirable of their sex. Every philosophic observer knows that names do influence their wearers. The Kates are a distinct species of girl; the Susans are another, and so with the Marias, the Ediths, and the Carolines. When a name is given to a girl baby the chances are at least seven to one that she will live up to her name. To a less degree men are also influenced by their names, but there are certain masculine names which condemn the unfortunate boys to whom they are given to lives of ignominy, if not of crime. Miss Cholmondeley was right in her theory that a girl's future can be influenced by her name, but she was all wrong in her philology. Jezebel was, on the whole, a kind and considerate name to give a girl, although undoubtedly persons ignorant of philology would think it a very objectionable name. I am so confident of the truth of my theory as to the name Jezebel, that if any man will produce twelve girl babies under one year of age each, I will undertake to pay him a large sum of money in case more than two of the girls turn out badly.

However, aside of the question of the name, "Jezebel," the book is well worth reading, and it is, as most of the critics have recognized, decidedly better than the author's first book.

A new boys' magazine has just made its appearance, and as it is well written and well edited it ought to be successful. But is it not true that the penny-dreadful and the dime novel have killed the demand for children's magazines? I have seen the rise and fall of so many of these latter publications during the last thirty years that I doubt if the demand for them exists to any great extent. What a boy wants to read is stories full of blood-curdling adventure. The boys' magazine, if it aspires to enter decent homes, cannot compete in this respect with the penny-dreadfuls. The latter can furnish ten murders to the one that is timidly mentioned in the boys' magazine, and it can treat of all sorts of crime with a fullness of detail that the boys' magazine could never hope to imitate. If, then, a boy can buy an unlimited supply of precisely the sort of reading that he likes at a much lower price than he can buy a decent magazine, will he not be sure to buy the penny-dreadfuls? And as a matter of fact, is this not precisely what he does? A childs' magazine which can be read aloud by parents to children who are too young to read has a field into which the penny-dreadful cannot enter, but the sort of boys' magazine which all parents could heartily approve must find it rather hard work to attract and hold its audience.

The other day we had a new novel by Miss Braddon, and now we have a new one by Miss Broughton. How the years flow on, and likewise how perennial is the flow of the Braddon and Broughton novels. I scarcely like to think how many years ago it was that "Cometh Up as a Flower" appeared to please and shock the public. Since then Miss Broughton has done excellent work. She has got rid of the peculiarities that made her earlier books objectionable to people of sound literary taste, and she has kept all the sparkle and pathos that constituted their real merit. I always welcome a new Broughton novel, and I trust the day is far away when that pleasure will be denied to me. "Foes in Law" is the title of Miss Broughton's new book, and I am waiting to read it with as much interest as we were all waiting a short time since to read election returns.

There are to be no more "Thompkins" poems in The Daily Chronicle. Mr. Barry Pain, the author of those amusing verses, has written an obituary of the late alleged Thompkins, which most of the readers of The Chronicle will accept in perfect good faith. I should not be at all surprised if there were to be a supscription suggested for the benefit of the children of the lamented Radical poet. The queer thing about the poems was that although they were an almost daily feature of The Chronicle for several years, they were always good. Mr. Pain has the faculty of doing the same thing day after day and week after week and never showing any signs of weariness. I forget how long ago it was that the first number of To-day appeared, but it certainly was at least six years ago, and every week since then the paper has contained Mr. Pain's delightful column, alleged to be written by a bus conductor. Other men might do two or three "conductors" or two or three Thompkins poems nearly as well as Mr. Pain, but I do not know any one who could continue to do them regularly year after year.

There is a discussion in one of the papers under the heading "Is Mr. Swinburne a Poet?" which has been going on for several weeks. I have not read it, but the mere fact that such a discussion is possible makes one wonder what is the conception of poetry formed by the contributors to the discussion. By and by we shall have a discussion of the question, Was Sir Walter Scott a novelist? or Is Mr. Joseph Chamberlain a politician?

Mr. Swinburne, who is now gray-haired, lives in a suburban town, and is seldom seen in London. Every day, no matter what the weather may be, he takes his constitutional, and there has grown up a legend among his fellow-townsmen to the effect that Mr. Swinburne has received a large annuity, on the condition that he never once misses his daily walk. It need hardly be said that this legend has no foundation in fact. The poet is in good health, though he has always had the look of a fragile man. I wonder what he thinks of the discussion as to his rank as a poet. That is one of the things that most people supposed to have been settled at least twenty-five years ago.

Mr. Morley Roberts, who is becoming a most voluminous author, has in his "Lord Linlithgow" drawn his hero from Lord Rosebery, and has surrounded him with men, and probably with women—though as to that I cannot say—who are well known in London. Mr. Cecil Rhodes also appears in the book under the same name given to him by the author in "The Colossus." The book is vigorous and vitalized, and it will furnish good reading even to those who know nothing of the people whose portraits Mr. Roberts has drawn. But the queation arises, if this sort of thing is to go what is to become of contemporary history? A thousand years hence posterity will rely upon the English novel for truthful representations of life in the Victorian age, and without doubt posterity will attach more credit to the novel which professes to give the portraits of living men and women then it will attach to the more imaginative works of the historians of that day. When the Macaulay of the thirtieth century writes of Lord Rosebery, he will probably omit to mention the intrigue between the noble Earl and the Colossus of the Cape, which forms part of Mr. Roberts's book, and he will be, as we all know, quite justified in so doing, because no such intrigue as Mr. Roberts describes ever took place. Then the unfortunate historian will be overwhelmed with citations from "Lord Linlithgow," and will be told that he should have consulted that admirable picture of men and manners before writing his history. It will be pointed out to him that the author of the novel—who by that time will probably be said to have been a son or a brother of Mr. John Morley—would never have dreamed of writing as he did unless the circumstances of the alleged intrigue between Lord Rosebery and Mr. Rhodes were a matter of public notoriety. The result will be that the historian will be discredited and the memory of Lord Rosebery will be not altogether what it should be. If this is to be the result of introducing real people into novels, the practice is certain to become a dangerous one, provided the truth of history is of any consequence. It is a solemn thought that many a novelist who fancies that he is only writing novels is really furnishing the histories which future generations will believe. The men of the thirtieth century will treat John Oliver Hobbes as an authority as to Disraeli and Mr. Anthony Hope as an unofficial biographer of Mr. Chamberlain. Whether history will benefit or be deteriorated by this state of things cannot be confidently affirmed. Judging from a large number of histories which have been written in the last hundred years, it is quite possible that history will become more trustworthy if more imagination and less fact is used in the construction of it.

Mr. Louis Becke's new novel, "Tom Wallis," is a tale of the Pacific, which is full of adventure. But it is much more than this, for it is a picture of life among the islands, painted in such vivid colors that it compels the reader's attention. There is probably no man living who knows the Pacific as intimately as Mr. Becke knows it, and if he were to publish his autobiography, the way in which he acquired this knowledge would be found to be as interesting as any of his stories. Mr. Becke made his place with his first book, "By Reef and Palm," and there is no likelihood that he will ever loose it, especially if he continues to give us work like "Tom Wallis."

An Excellent Blunder.

From The London Telegraph.

Blunders are always entertaining to people who are better informed than those who make them. A choice selection brightens the pages of the report of the Board of Education for 1899-1900. It would be difficult to beat the following passage from an answer as to the carbon dioxide present in the air. "If you seal up in a tube a plant in one bulb and an animal in the other, the plant will produce the oxygen necessary for the animal, and the animal the CO2 necessary for the plant, and they will go on living together for hundreds of years."

THE SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. Spears's Account of Its Origin, Growth and Suppression in America.*

For some persons the harrowing scenes depicted in John R. Spears's "American Slave Trade" will prove unpalatable reading. Looking back fifty years it seems scarcely possible that men possessing a single grain of humanity or honor would engage in such an atrocious and degrading traffic as the author here describes. Some readers will undoubtedly say it would have been better if the details here set forth were relegated to oblivion. The author, however, believes that a valuable lesson can be learned from the study of this subject. He has carefully examined the public records, and out of these, and from the stories of travelers and slave traders, prepared a work which is not only authentic, but deeply interesting. The deities and horrors of the slave trade surpass those described in any branch of history. As the author says: "The soldiers who have looted cities, the pirates who have made passengers and sailors walk the plank, and the religious zealots who have burned their opponents at the stake were more merciful than the slave traders."

Slavery was common in the American Colonies, as is shown by various early documents. The law of Massachusetts in 1640 says: "There shall never be any bond slavery amongst us, unles it be the lawfull captives taken in just wars [or such] as [shall] willingly sell themselves." A class of men and women were brought from their homes in England under contract to serve for a stated number of years, and were sold to the Virginian planters, whose colonial labor system was based on the apprentice system, and it is a well-known fact that many men of education and ability came to the colonies as "apprentices" and were sold out the same as merchandise. John Rolfe, who married Pocahontas, wrote that "a Dutch man of warre that sold us twenty Negars" came to Jamestown, Va., late in August, 1619. This is supposed to be the beginning of the African slave importations into this country. The first American-built slave trader of which there is a definite record was the ship Desire, a vessel of 120 tons, built at Marblehead in 1636. The Dutch settlers of New Amsterdam, after the custom of the time, tried to enslave the aboriginal inhabitants, but the task was found so harassing and unprofitable that they soon sought supplies of blacks from Africa. In fact, enslaving red men led to such trouble that a wall was built across the lower end of Manhattan Island, where Wall Street is now found, to keep red lovers of liberty from driving the Dutch slave catchers over the Battery beach into the bay. At the very birth of foreign commerce from New England ports the African slave trade became a regular business. In 1770 Rhode Island had 150 vessels in the trade, and it is undoubtedly true, as Samuel Hopkins said in his "Reminiscences," that "Rhode Island has been more deeply interested with slave trade and has enslaved more Africans than any other colony in New England."

The early history of the slave trade is gathered mostly from the correspondence of the Captains who commanded the slavers. These letters are curious combinations of defective spelling and interesting facts. The average New England slave trader in the eighteenth century was of less than 100 tons burthen, which would nowadays be considered a dangerous craft to put to sea in for a voyage to Africa, to say nothing of their fitness for transporting 100 or more slaves. The Fame, a noted slaver and privateer of Newport, had a keel 75 feet long. The space between decks, where the slaves were kept during the time the cargo was accumulating, (three to ten months,) and while crossing the Atlantic, (six to ten weeks,) was usually a room as long and as wide as the ship, but only 3 or 4 feet high. The men were ironed together, two by two, by the ankles, but the women and children were left unironed. The irons on the men were fastened to the deck or ceiling, and each man was allowed an average space of 16 inches wide by 6 inches long. In 1808 the trade was outlawed, while twelve years later it was declared piracy, and a few warships were sent out to suppress it. In 1847 the Felicidade, of thirty tons, and the Rio Bango, of ten tons, were captured, both loaded with slaves. The Maria, say 50 feet long and 16 feet wide, had 237 on board when taken. Some New York oyster sloops are longer than she was.

The traffic, in its infancy, and long after, was lawful and respected. There is a record of one good old elder, whose ventures on the coast always turned out well. He uniformly returned thanks on the Sunday following the arrival of a slaver in the harbor of Newport, "that an overruling Providence has been pleased to bring to this land of freedom another cargo of benighted heathen, to enjoy the blessing of a Gospel dispensation." In those days slaves were secured for a moderate consideration in barter, but with the steady growth of the trade prices rose steadily. With the increasing demand came a change in the methods of obtaining cargoes. Originally captives in war were the stock in trade, but subsequently raids were resorted to, and free men were kidnapped and sold in the most heartless manner. Treachery and murder were common practices resorted to in order to secure a few slaves. After the trade was outlawed cruisers were stationed on the African coast to stop the work of the slavers. The slave ships came to the coast disguised as honest traders, and watching for a day when the coast was clear; then they got their slaves quickly on board and sailed away. To enable a ship to load quickly, depots were established at convenient points and pens were built by setting tree trunks into the ground to make a high fence. In these the slaves were held by the hundred; sometimes more than a thousand were imprisoned in one pen to await the arrival of a ship. Kidnapping and raiding increased until the market price of slaves fell as low as from $12 to $20 a head. The demand continued because the hardships of slave life killed off the slaves more rapidly than slave children were born. The slave trade on the whole was enormously profitable. The author gives a detailed statement which showed a profit of over $40,000 on a capital invested of about $20,000. In one case slaves that cost $16 were sold for $360. In another case $200,000 was the net profit realised from one trip.

The history of the movement for the extirpation of slavery and slave traffic is concurrent with the chronicle of the slave dealers. The abolition movement, however, has been more thoroughly treated than the doings of the traffickers in human flesh. For this reason the present volume is specially valuable and interesting. We will not attempt to follow the course of the slave-freeing movement, but will confine this notice to a few of the interesting features of the slave trade described by the author. The removal of slavery meant a severe blow to our commerce, which had been brought to a leading place on the sea through the profits of the slave trade. England as early as 1772, through the memorable decision of Lord Mansfield, had closed its ports to the slave traders. In October, 1774, the colonists, when united to oppose British oppression, turned their thoughts to the unfortunate negro slaves and signed an agreement that they would "not purchase any slave imported after the first day of December next; after which time we will wholly discontinue the slave trade, and will neither be concerned in it ourselves, nor will we hire our vessels, nor sell our commodities or manufactures to those who are concerned in it." The prohibition in slave importation was not legally imposed until the act of March, 1807, became operative. This law proving ineffectual on account of the ease and success of slave smuggling, an act was passed by Congress in 1820 which imposed the death penalty upon all who were proved to be engaged in the slave trade. In 1842 the United States entered into a treaty with Great Britain to keep a sufficient naval force on the slave coast to effectually aid in the suppression of the slave trade. In order to escape detection, it was a common practice for the slaver to drown his black cargo when chased by the naval authorities. One case is recorded where 600 negroes were thus disposed of. In 1836 no less than 40,000 slaves were sold for export from Virginia to other States. The coastwise traffic often developed incidents of international importance. Several cargoes were wrecked near Bermuda, the Bahamas, or Nassau, and the slaves reaching those ports were declared free, as, by the laws of Great Britain all men were born free and equal and there was no such thing as property in man. With the advent of Abraham Lincoln came the end of slavery. The blockade of the Confederate ports by the Federal ships in 1861 ended slave smuggling.

This sketch of the American slave trade, while deeply interesting, can hardly be considered a complete history of the traffic. It outlines most of the principal features of the trade in a clear and concise manner, but only refers to many important slave-trading enterprises which are replete with interest and which, if elaborated, would make a most fascinating story. The illustrations, as is sometimes the case with the reproduction of imaginary scenes, are in many respects unsatisfactory.

The Primacy of the Anglo-Saxon.

John Fiske in The Atlantic.

In the time of Charles I. there were about 5,000,000 people in the world speaking the language of Shakespeare; at the time of our first National census there were about 12,000,000, one-third of them in the United States; to-day there are more than 120,000,000, three-fifths of them in the United States, and there are children now going to school who will live to see this vast number trebled. The task of organizing society politically so that such immense communities might grow up peacefully, preserving their liberties and affording ample opportunity for the varied exercise of the human faculties, is a task which baffled the splendid talents of ancient Greece, and in which the success of the Romans was but partial and short lived. We believe that the men who used the mingled speech of Alfred and of William the Norman have solved the great political problem better than others have solved it. If we except the provinces of the Netherlands, the Swiss cantons, and such tiny city States as Monaco and San Marino, which retain their ancient institutions, there is not a nation on earth, making any pretense to freedom and civilization which has not a Constitution in great measure copied, within the present century, either from England or from the United States. Thus, whether willingly or not, does the civilized world confess to primacy of the English race in matters political.

FRANKLIN SQUARE NEW YORK CITY

In the preface to his study of Milton Mr. Raleigh disarms such of his readers as might consider his theme outworn by accepting Bacon's verdict that criticism of great writers must be classed as a "science of conceit," at the same time urging that an attempt at appreciation of Shakespeare or Milton made for love of the subject is not conceited by necessity. "In the end it is the critic, not the author, who is judged by it," he says, "and where his sympathies have been too narrow, or his sight too dim, condemned without reprieve and buried without a tombstone." In his own attempt Mr. Raleigh shows himself far from narrow in his sympathies. He is neither a worshipper nor a scorner. He makes no effort to show Milton less Milton than he was. He does full justice to the superb egotism that meditated gaining "an immortality of fame," and that never failed to be conscious of what Lowell called the mysterious and awful powers which had laid their unimaginable hands upon the fair head of the poet, to consecrate him to the noblest offices; he is not led into the great absurdity of assuming that a man totally devoid of humor has it in some form too subtle for human nature's daily comprehension, and freely admits that the lack in Milton of that sweet and cheering grace has alienated thousands of his readers. His attitude is that of the genuine critic who finds it beneath him to be flippant in the presence of genius, and still less appropriate to force the more playful qualities upon a nature ruled by dignity. His portrait of Milton, therefore, has in it no trace of the legerdemain so distasteful to a reader with respect for harmony between subject and treatment. Nor does it show us an unfamiliar aspect of the poet. We see much the same beautiful and serious face that looks at us from Lowell's essays, with perhaps a little less impetuosity and more of melancholy than Lowell saw in it; we see the product of both Renaissance and Puritanism that moved M. Scherer's wonder and caused him to regard Milton as a literary enigma; we see "the ascetic nature in a sheath of beauty," that roused Mr. Bagehot's eloquence at the same time that it provoked his somewhat unequal wit.

Mr. Raleigh's discussion of "Paradise Lost" has a freshness of interest gained perhaps by his avoidance of technical points and his recognition of Milton's large imagination with which a meticulous fancy could keep no company. He is not only guiltless of the execrable want of taste with which M. Taine approached the actors of the great cumbrous drama, but he succeeds in winning sympathy as well as admiration for the cold and lofty images created by Milton in the solitude of his blindness by connecting their chief effect with the misfortune that set their author apart from the world in which he lived. "The bulk of 'Paradise Lost,'" he says, "was written between the sixth and the thirteenth years of his blindness. Since the veil had fallen he had lived with the luminous shapes that he could picture against the dark. The human face had lost, in his recollection of it, something of its minuter delineation, but nothing of its radiance. On the other hand, the human figure, in its most significant gestures and larger movements, haunted his visions. His description of the wife whom he had never seen is an early model of many of his later drawings. She comes to his bedside and leans over him, stretching forth her arms:

"Her face was veiled; yet to my fancied sight
Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
So clear as in no face with more delight.

"Adam and Eve, as they are first seen in Paradise, have the same shining quality, the same vagueness of beauty expressing itself in purely emotional terms. Satan standing on the top of Mount Niphates, looking down on Eden spread out at his feet, and then with fierce gesticulation addressing himself to the sun at the zenith, is one of the dim solitary figures that dwell in the mind's eye."

Regarding the prose works, in which we trace the map of the poet's personal experiences, Mr. Raleigh has little that is striking to say, but he emphasizes the vivid contrasts of that curiously tormented soul. "It is idle," Lowell said of him, "to talk of the loneliness of one the habitual companions of whose mind were the past and future." And if his masterpiece is, indeed, as Mr. Raleigh says, "a monument to dead ideas," his prose works are less lofty monuments to ideas that cannot die. In his zeal to solve the problems of domestic life, of education, and to promote the freedom of the press he keeps pace with the human interests that are as much of to-day as of yesterday, and in one form or another must occupy the thought of the morrow. His present advocate provides him with an epitaph which certainly could fit no contemptible or crabbed nature: "Whether he treat of religion, of education, of divorce, or of civil government," Mr. Raleigh says, "the error is always the same—a confidence too absolute in the capacity and integrity of the reasonable soul of man."

Skilly. Skillet.

From Notes and Queries.

I am told that in workhouses the matutinal gruel is dubbed skilly. This reminds me of having read in some account of early monastic institutions that a small bell called the skilla (cf. Old Germanic skellan, to ring, to resound) was rung for breakfast, which, again, suggests that the origin of the word skillet, still used in New England for a round iron pot on three legs devoted to the boiling of Indian meal gruel, or "mush," may be other than that attributed to it in Webster's Dictionary: "O. F. escuellettc * * * from Latin scutella, dim. of scutra, a dish."

Record Prices for Americana in London.

The recent sale at Sotheby's, in London, (Nov. 14 to 17,) of a portion of Lord Ashburton's library, (865 lots, realizing £6,256 17s. 6d.,) brought upon the market a number of the rarest examples of Americana, for which, in mosts cases, record prices were secured. Chief among the rarities was a perfect copy of Denton's "Brief Description of New York, Formerly Called New Netherlands," London, 1670, a fine unbound copy, with the date intact, which was sold for £400, the highest of recorded prices. Barlow's copy, (formerly McCloy's,) which also had the date, brought $525 in 1890, and was resold for $615 in 1891 at the Brayton Ives sale, and after passing through several hands is now owned in Brooklyn. This copy was long supposed to be the only one in America with the date, which was usually cut off by the binder on account of the largeness of the title page. Another copy, however, was discovered a few years ago in a volume of pamphlets in Columbia College, and still another (in uncut condition) is owned by a New York collector. The Ashburton copy, which has come, it is said, to New York, makes four perfect copies in this country—a record which England propably cannot equal.

Among the other rare American books sold at the Ashburton auction were the following:

Johnson's "History of New England," London, 1654, (one leaf defective,) £37 10s. (Brinley's copy, uncut, $150; Barlow's, $115; Ives's, $110; Deane's, $150.)

"A Relation of Maryland," London, 1635, (with the excessively scarce folding map, and even without it an item of great rarity,) £165.

Vincent's "True Relation of the Late Battle Fought in New England Between the English and the Pequot Savages," London, 1638, (a few headlines cut close,) £84, (the record price, Deane's having brought $240 in 1898.)

"A Declaration of the State of the Colony and Affairs in Virginia," London, 1620, (unbound and last leaf defective,) £38. (Ives's, a fine copy, $150.)

Higginson's "New England's Plantation," London, 1630, £98; (the record price, Ives's copy having brought $195 in 1891. No copy was in the Menzies, Brinley, Barlow, or Deane collection.)

Castell's "Short Discovery of the Coasts and Continent of America," London, 1644, (some headlines cut into,) £18 10s.

Dumont's "Mémoire Contenant les Evenements qui se sont passés à la Louisiane depuis 1715," an unpublished manuscript, (according to the cataloguer,) written on 443 quarto pages, £116.

"Virginia's Cure, or an Advisive Narrative Concerning Virginia," London, 1662, "by R. G.," (unbound, very rare,) £76.

Lederer's "Discoveries in Three Several Marches from Virginia to the West Coast of Carolina," London, 1672, with the rare map, (unbound,) £102, (the record price, Griswold's bringing $315 in 1876. Barlow's $265 in 1890, and Ives's $275 in 1891.)

Capt. John Smith's "Advertisements for the Unexpected Planters of New England," London, 1631, with the rare folding map, (unbound,) £160, (the record price, Deane's having brought $630 in 1898, Barlow's $310 in 1890.)

Thomas's "Historical and Geographical Account of the Province and Country of Pennsylvania and of West New Jersey," London, 1698, with the map, £62. (Ives's copy, $200.)

Winslow's "Good News from New England," London, 1624, £240, (the record price, Deane's having realized $800 in 1898, and Barlow's $350 in 1890.)

Wood's "New England's Prospect," London, 1635, with the folding woodcut map, £46. (Rice's copy, $200 in 1870, and Ives's $105 in 1891.)

Humors of Mispunctuation.

From The London Globe.

Married lady, "hospital trained," advertises that she will receive into her house any "lady requiring care and comfort, including epilepsy, hysteria, or slight mental case." The advantages of being "hospital trained"!

The South Bucks Standard has a similar mistake in a delightful paragraph describing some photographs taken by a local artist at a fashionable shooting party. "Excellent portraits have been secured," runs the paragraph, "of the Duke of —, Earl —, the Hon. —, the Countess —, who has the little Lord — on her knee, and, indeed, all the members of the party."

In Texas a man once advertised for "a boss hand over 5,000 sheep that can speak Spanish fluently." Then there was the horse dealer who boldly advertised: "A splendid gray horse, calculated for a charger, or would carry a lady with a switch tail." A member of a well-known club was standing on the steps of his clubhouse when a stranger approached and asked: "Does a man belong to your club with one eye named Walker?" "I don't know," was the answer; "what's the name of his other eye?" An advertisement contains the request for "a coachman to look after a pair of horses of a religious turn of mind." One is reminded of the countryman who went round to borrow a "recumbent posture" in which to take his medicine.

Principles. Patriotism.

Joel Chandler Harris in The World's Work.

It's lots too late in the day to try to hamper the politicians wi' too much principles. Forty-odd year ago it sounded all right to hear that kind of talk. In them days folks hadn't nigh reached the'r present state of p'ogress an' civilization. They was ruther underdone as compared to what our town editor calls the th'obbin' present. An' the editor's correct. I size myself up wi' Gus thar—I'm lots older'n him of he ain't got no ha'r—an' I can see as plain as the nose on your face, right whar the th'obbin' present has run away from me. Oh, no! don't fetch up no before-the-war talk in the presence of Gus an' the risin' generation. They won't have it. * * * Too much principles is like too much piety; you sorter feel like laughin' at the feller that's afflicted wi' 'em. Principles an' patr'tism will do mighty well for debatin' societies, an' for lessons in the fourth reader, but when you git down to business an' begin for to mingle wi' grown men like Gus, you've got to b'ar in mind, as the poet says, that life is yearnest, life is reel.

"I'm old enough for to be gray in the mind, an' I've allers took notice that men in trade or politics is turribly hampered ef they don't wrop th'r principles in a camphor rag till after hours. Why, 'tain't been so mighty long ago that I heard talk of a preacher gittin' up in the pulpit an' sayin' that prosperity is one mighty good sign of Christ'anity. 'Twas a bran' new idea ti me, bekase I never come across it in my Bible, much as I've read it. The way I account for that is that my Bible was printed in the thirties, an' I reckon they've got a new one out by this time.

HINTS FROM THE MAILBAG.

A Few More Long Words and Sentences.

LILIAN HERBERT ANDREWS, New York, writes: "I have been amused at the efforts of your various correspondents to discover the longest German word, and have been patiently awaiting their success. They seem to have given up the struggle, although one of them has sent you a part of the word and another has lengthened it a little. The real word, as I was taught it in Germany twenty-odd years ago, is as follows:

"Konstantinopolitanischerdudelsackpfeifenmachersgesellenbergermeister.

"This word has exactly the same number of letters as Bismarck's word for apothecary—seventy-one—but Bismarck's word has only twenty-one syllables, and this has twenty-four."

O. A. H., RICHMOND, Va., submits the prize sentence from Hubbard's "Indian Wars," (1677,) as an instance of long sentences: "One John Gallop, with one man more, and two boys, coming from Connecticut, and intending to put in at Long Island, as he came from thence, being at the month of the harbor was forced by a sudden change of the wind to bear up for Block Island, or Fisher's Island, where, as they were sailing along there, they met with a pinace, which they found to be John Oldham's, who had been sent to trade with the Pequods, (to make trial of the reality of their pretended friendship after the murder of Capt. Stone,) they hailed the vessel, but had no answer, although they saw the deck full of Indians (fourteen in all,) and a little before that had seen a canoe go from the vessel full of Indians likewise, and goods, whereupon they suspected they had killed John Oldham, who had only two boys and two Narrhaganset Indians in his vessel besides himself, and the rather because they let slip and set up sail (being two miles from the shore, the wind and tide coming off the shore of the island whereby they drove toward the mainland of Narrhaganset;) therefore they went ahead of them, and having nothing but two pieces, and two pistols, they bore up near the Indians, who stood on the deck of the vessel ready armed with guns, swords, and pikes; but John Gallop, a man of stout courage, let fly among them and so galled them that they got all down under the hatches, and then they stood off again, and returning with a good gale, they stemmed her upon the quarter, and almost overset her, which so affrighted the Indians, as six of them leaped overboard, and were drowned, yet they durst not board her, but stood off again, and fitted their anchor, so as stemming her the second time, they bored her bow through with their anchor, and sticking fast to her, they made divers shot through the sides of her, and so raked her fore and aft (being but inch board) as they must needs kill or hurt some of the Indians; but seeing none of them come forth, they got loose from her, and then stood off again: then four or five more of the Indians leaped into the sea, and were likewise drowned; whereupon there being but four left in her, they boarded her; when an Indian came up and yielded; him they bound and put into the hole: then another yielded; him they also bound, but Gallop, being well acquainted with their skill to unloose one another, if they lay near together, and having no place to keep them asunder, flung him bound into the sea; then looking about they saw John Oldham under an old sail stark naked, having his head cleft to the brains; his hands and legs cut as if they had been cutting them off; yet warm: so they put him into the sea: but could not well tell how to come at the other two Indians (who were in a little room underneath with their swords,) so they took the goods which were left, and the sails, and towed the boat away, but night coming on, and the wind rising, they were forced to turn her off, and the wind carried her to the Narrhaganset shore, where they left her." (Five hundred and fifty-eight words.)

ROBERT WATERS, West Hoboken, N. J., writes: "I am surprised that not one of your 'long-sentence' correspondents has mentioned the name of William M. Evarts, who is famous for his long-sentence style, perhaps the greatest master of that peculiar form of speech. A glance at the reports of his speeches will show this in a moment. I am not an admirer of long sentences, but I confess that Mr. Evarts can use them in a masterly way. I do not think there is, in the whole range of forensic and oratorical records, a more striking contrast in this respect than that between the speeches of Mr. Evarts and those of his opponent, Mr. Beach, in the Beecher-Tilton trial—a cause célèbre quite as remarkable for oratorical skill as the debate between Douglas and Lincoln in the contest for the Senator's seat in 1847. Mr. Beach is the very impersonation of plain speech, while Mr. Evarts is the reverse—full of long, involved, learned, and high-sounding sentences. Yet one cannot help admiring the skill with which he manages his sentences, with their many modifying clauses and phrases, and how well he makes his predicates agree with their far-off subjects. It is in speaking, not in writing, in this way that a mastery of language is shown. Any one can write long sentences; few speak them. You know you can tell at once by the sentences of the speaker whether a reported speech was read from manuscript or spoken freely. The latter is always the better. When Mr. Evarts was spoken to about his long sentences he wittily remarked: 'I know only two classes of people who don't like long sentences—criminals and stenographers.'

"But there are others who don't like them. Short sentences impress and stick—long ones seldom. You must sometimes read a long sentence twice in order to see what is meant. Who can repeat a long sentence? Who learns one by heart? Look at Antony's address—every sentence, almost every word, is short. No man uses long sentences in conversation. Why should he in writing? The shortest sentence in the Bible, 'Jesus wept,' is perhaps the most touching. An ordinary writer would probably make forty words of it. That style which can be most easily understood and appreciated by the greatest number of persons is, I think, the best. Is not this the style of Shakespeare, Bunyan, Franklin, Scott, Defoe, Dickens, Macaulay? I heartily indorse what Mr. de Cantillon says of the last-named writer, who never wrote a sentence that needed to be twice read to understand it."

The Personal Appearance of Christ.

W. SPENCER ROBERTSON of New York and Miss FLORENCE L. LINDSAY of Woodlyn, Penn., answering H. M. Miller's inquiry in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Nov. 24, for a personal description of Jesus, refer him to one written by Publius Lentulus, President of Judea in the reign of Tiberius Caesar, which is as follows: "There lives at this time in Judea a man of singular virtue, whose name is Jesus Christ, whom the barbarians esteem as a prophet, but his followers love and adore him as the offspring of the immortal God. He calls back the dead from their graves, and heals all sorts of disease with a word or a touch. He is a tall man and well-shaped, of an amiable and reverend aspect; his hair of a color that can hardly be matched, falling into graceful curls, waving about, and very agreeably couching upon his shoulders, parted on the crown of the head, running as a stream to the front, after the fashion of the Nazarites. His forehead, high, large, and imposing; his cheeks without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a lovely red. His nose and mouth forming with exquisite symmetry. His beard thick, and of a color suitable to his hair, reaching below his chin, and parting in the middle like a fork. His eyes bright, blue, clear, and serene; look, innocent, dignified, manly, and mature. In proportion of body, most perfect and captivating. His hands and arms most delectable to behold. He rebukes with majesty, counsels with mildness; his whole address, whether in word or deed, being eloquent and grave. No man has seen him laugh, yet his manners are exceedingly pleasant; but he has wept frequently in the presence of men. He is temperate, modest, and wise. A man, for his extraordinary beauty and divine perfections, surpassing the children of men in every sense."

A Confusion of Smiths.

L. W. B., New York, writes to correct the statement of W. J. Price touching Alexander Smith, in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Nov. 10, and says: "He is very much 'not to the point' (a position he confesses is possible) in ascribing the 'Hymn to the Flowers' to that poet. It was, in fact, written by Horace Smith, one of the authors of the once famous 'Rejected Addresses,' who was born in London in 1779, and died in 1839. (Vide Dana's Household Book of Poetry.)"

JOEL BENTON, Poughkeepsie, further adds: "As 'Outre-Mer' appeared in 1835, when Alexander Smith was only five years old, and the hymn was written some time before Longfellow's book came out, it will be seen that a misattribution and an anachronism are owing to 'a plague of Smiths.'"

M. H. B., Asbury Park, N. J., after also kindly setting the erring Mr. Price "to rights" with reference to the Smiths, adds by way of protest: "The 'forgetting' of Alexander Smith is news to me, and I do not accept the statement that he is forgotten. There are some, hardly an inconsiderable number, who delight still in 'Dreamthorpe.' By that charming book of essays Alexander Smith to my mind will long be remembered."

Paul Jones's French Again.

AUGUSTUS C. BUELL, Philadelphia, the author of "Paul Jones," writes, in reference to a critic's remarks in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW of Oct. 20, as follows: "Without characterizing the tenor of your correspondent's inquiries concerning Paul Jones's ability to write French as hypercritical, I would remark that the faults of syntax referred to ought to be judged rather by the facilities of learning French that existed at that period—1791—than by the facilities which exist now. That was before the days of Fasquelle, and although perfect knowledge of French syntax could be attained by foreigners then as now, the process then involved much more time and labor than now, and the syntax itself was less conventional in 1791 than in 1900.

"That Jones's French syntax was by no means perfect is freely admitted in several places in my history of him. Even in the letters which Jones addressed to the King can be found 'lapses of grammar,' particularly in the omissions of particles and occasionally in the faulty termination of a word.

"'Ces gens etoient si mechans que je n'avois trouvé d'autre expediens pour les commander, que de les diviser en deux parties et de mettre un coquin sous oeil et la garde d'un autre.'

"I select the above because it is interesting as Jones's own description of the character of the original crew of the Richard, in June, 1779, and before he had obtained the hundred and odd exchanged American sailors at Nantes. Your critics may translate it. And if they doubt the accuracy of the transcription they can find the book itself in the National Library at Washington. Even your critics might 'analyze it grammatically in French,' might perhaps even 'translate it faithfully into English,' and 'make sense.'

"Should it be interesting to further pursue studies of Paul Jones's French they might examine his letter to the King dated 'Brest, Oct. 19, 1778.' (Volume I., Pages 154 et seq. of my book.) In this letter the French text has been modernized by substituting 'ai' for 'oi,' and 'nts' for 'ns,' &c., in certain words that will suggest themselves. And in a few instances con-
